PREFACE

THIS book is not an attempt to demonstrate the truth of the Catholic doctrine of the Holy Spirit by an appeal to the New Testament, nor does it profess to make a formal contribution to the study of New Testament theology. Its purpose is rather to assist the reader in the effort to realize the position of the first Christian teachers and writers, when they speak of the Holy Spirit in connexion with the history of their times or out of their own experiences of the spiritual life.

In pursuing this aim I have not thought it necessary to spend many words upon the questions of literary and historical criticism which are raised by every book in the New Testament. The testimony which the writers bear to the belief or the experience of their age is but seldom, and in a relatively low degree, affected by questions of this kind. Whether the Miraculous Conception is a fact, as I believe, or a legend, as many now assume, the story shews the relation which, in the judgement of two representative Christian writers of the first century, the Holy Spirit held to the beginnings of our Lord's human life. Whether the fourth Gospel was written by the son of Zebedee or by some other early Evangelist, its estimate of the work of the Paraclete is equally valuable as an interpretation of the teaching of Christ upon this subject in the light of the subsequent history of the Apostolic Church. And whatever views may be held as to the historical character of certain narratives, or the date or authorship of certain books, the New Testament as a whole speaks with a voice too clear and full to be overpowered by the din of our critical controversies. In the following pages I ask the reader to listen to that voice, as it tells him what the presence and working of the Spirit of Christ meant to the first generation of believers.

In the first two parts of this book, which form a running commentary upon the New Testament references to the Holy Spirit, I have placed at the head of each chapter the Greek text of the passages discussed in it. In the commentary itself quotations are made in an English form, which departs from the Revised Version wherever it has seemed desirable to call attention to points of order or structure or exact meaning which could not be emphasized in a version intended for general use.

My best thanks are due to my friend Dr Bebb, Principal of St David's College, Lampeter, who in the midst of many engagements has found time to correct the sheets of this book; and to the compositors, readers, and officers of the University Press, to whose conscientious work I have owed much for many years.

I hope that I may be permitted to follow up this study of New Testament Pneumatology by a companion volume on the Pneumatology of the ancient Church in post-Apostolic times.

CYRIL OF JERUSALEM.

FOREWORD.

AN enquiry into the teaching of the New Testament on the being and functions of the Holy Spirit must begin with a brief retrospect. The New Testament tacitly assumes acquaintance with the Old Testament doctrine of the Spirit, and starts from it. Before the reader can follow the Apostolic writers in their advance upon the position of the Hebrew Canon, he must understand what that position was, and how it presented itself to the minds of devout Jews in the time of our Lord.

1. The doctrine of the Spirit is a prominent feature in the theology of the Old Testament. While the Son or Word of God scarcely appears in its pages, the Spirit of Jahveh or Elohim meets us in each of the three great sections of the Hebrew Bible.

The Hebrew *rûah*¹, like the Greek πνεῦμα and the Latin spiritus, originally had a physiological and not a psychological value, denoting the human breath. But since the breath is the symbol of animal life, and in man is also the means of expressing emotion and thought, the word naturally passed into higher meanings, such as the principle of life as contrasted with the 'flesh' or material form; the seat of thought and desire, of the rational and moral nature of man. While *nephesh*¹ (ψυχή, anima) is predicated freely of irrational animals as well as of human beings, rûah is rarely used except in reference to man or to God, in whose image man was made. No Hebrew writer speaks of the 'soul' of God²; but of the Spirit of God more frequent mention is made than of the spirit of man. The Spirit of God is the vital power which belongs to the Divine Being, and is seen to be operative in the world and in men. It is the Divine Energy which is the origin of all created life, and especially of human existence and the faculties of human nature. To its action are ascribed gifts of bodily strength and physical courage, as well as mental and spiritual capacities. More particularly, it is regarded as the source of the gift of prophecy. The prophet is a *man of the Spirit*³; the Spirit of God falls upon him, fills his mind, and speaks by his mouth; he finds himself at times dominated by a spiritual force which comes from without and from above. Yet the prophets of the

² Such passages as Lev. xxvi. 11, Isa. i. 14, xlii. 1, Jer. v. 9, where God speaks after the manner of men, are scarcely exceptions.

Old Testament lay no exclusive claim to the possession of the Spirit. The nation of Israel as a whole had been under the Spirit's guidance from the time of the Exodus. Even the individual Israelite, though not a prophet, might become conscious of the presence of a purifying, uplifting Power which he knew as the Spirit of God's holiness, the princely, supremely good Spirit which was working in the depths of his being. He learnt to recognize in it a force which was present everywhere, on earth, in heaven, and in Sheol, searching out men's ways, throwing the light of God on the darkest recesses of their lives.

To this consciousness of the activity of the Divine Spirit in the life of Israel the Prophets added the expectation of a future outpouring of spiritual life which was to surpass all earlier gifts both in fulness and in extent. They foresaw a great revival of national vitality. The Spirit of God would breathe on a dead people and they would live. The Spirit would enter into their hearts and be in them a 'new spirit,' a spirit of penitence, obedience, and reconciliation with God. In those days the Spirit would be poured upon all flesh, i.e. on all sorts and conditions of men in Israel, without distinction of age or sex or rank. The desire of Moses the man of God that all the Lord's people might be prophets would at length receive its fulfilment. This great outpouring of the Spirit would find its culminating point in the Messianic King, on whom the Spirit of Jahveh was to rest permanently as the spirit of wisdom and understanding, counsel and might, knowledge and holy fear; the ideal Prophet, who would be anointed by the Spirit to preach a gospel of liberation and healing, comfort and joy. Great as had been the energy of the Divine Spirit in their own experience, it was foreseen by the Prophets that the new Israel of the Messianic age would be inspired both in head and members with a fuller strength and a deeper wisdom, corresponding with the larger mission on which it was to be sent.

2. The student of the New Testament must not overlook the non-canonical Jewish literature of Palestine and Alexandria which was earlier than the Christian era¹.

In the Palestinian writings of this period the doctrine of the Holy Spirit is less prominent than in the Canon; the stream of tradition on this subject has grown sluggish and shallow. The rising angelology of Judaism seems to have checked the earlier belief in the presence and activity of the Divine Spirit. Thus the Book of Enoch, which has much to say about angelic beings, and speaks frequently of the 'Lord of the spirits,' mentions the Spirit of the Lord but once. Nevertheless the chief features in the Old Testament doctrine reappear in this group of non-canonical writings. They recognize the Spirit of God as the vitalizing power in creation, the author of prophecy, the source of the purity and sincerity which give insight and judgement ; they repeat the promise of a great outpouring of the Spirit on Israel in the Messianic age, and they see in the future Messiah the special organ of spiritual power and life.

The Alexandrian Jewish literature is far more fruitful in references to the Holy Spirit, but less faithful to the great lines of Old Testament teaching. Under Greek influences Hebrew theology was carried at Alexandria into new fields of thought where it blended with conceptions more or less foreign to it. Thus the Book of Wisdom magnifies the cosmic significance of the work of the Spirit: the Spirit of the Lord has filled the world; it holds all things together; it is in all things. It is practically identified with Wisdom; Wisdom is a holy spirit of discipline, a spirit intelligent, beneficent, philanthropic, all powerful, all seeing. This great gift is not limited to Israel—so the writer of Wisdom not obscurely hints. On the last point Philo is explicit; from his point of view the Spirit is ‘the pure wisdom of which every man partakes’; if the worst of men have their better moments, they are indebted for these to this source of enlightenment. Even the prophetic afflatus is not confined to the Prophets of the Canon; Philo himself had many a time been conscious of a mysterious illumination which he could ascribe to nothing short of a Divine gift. On the other hand the Old Testament conception of prophecy is degraded by inspiration being regarded as an ἐνθουσιασμός, a possession which overmasters the prophet’s reason, turning him into a mere instrument upon which the Spirit plays. Of the elevation of the moral and spiritual life of man by the immanent Spirit of God Philo seems to have no knowledge. He attributes to the Spirit an operation upon the intellect rather than upon the heart.

There is, however, little reason to suppose that any of the New Testament writers was indebted to Alexandrian theology for his view of the work of the Holy Spirit. The Epistle to the Hebrews, which shews some affinity to Alexandrian ideas, contributes less to the New Testament doctrine of the Spirit than any other New Testament book of the same length. If St Paul or St John owes anything to Philo, it is in the field of Christology that the debt has been incurred, and not in that of Pneumatology¹. Nor, so far as we can judge, is the Palestinian literature responsible for the characteristic treatment of the Spirit which we find in the New Testament. This treatment is doubtless due in great part to the experience of the Apostolic Church, which was conscious of the new life of the Spirit, and describes the things which it had seen and heard and felt and known. But the experience of the primitive Church was but a continuation and enlargement of the experience of the Church of Israel which is expressed in the Old Testament. The New Testament doctrine of the Spirit begins where the Old Testament doctrine breaks off. The Holy Spirit of the

Gospels and the Acts, of the Epistles and the Apocalypse, is still "God exerting power, especially life-giving power¹"; the Spirit of God which moved on the face of the waters, which inspired the Prophets and the Psalmists, which guided Israel and dwelt in the hearts of those members of the nation who were Israelites indeed. But His presence under the New Covenant is manifested in new ways: in the Conception and Baptism, the life and ministry of Jesus Christ; in the regeneration and renewal of the members of Christ; in the common life and work of His mystical Body, the Universal Church.

3. The New Testament revelation of the Spirit is partly historical, partly didactic. We see the Spirit manifesting itself in the events of our Lord's life, and in the experience of believers after His ascension; and we also receive direct teaching upon the work of the Paraclete and upon the relation of Christians to Him. These aspects of the subject will be separately examined in the first and second parts of this book. In the third part an attempt will be made to collect the chief results, and thus to present the teaching of the Apostolic age as a whole.

Mentes nostras, Domine, Spiritus Paraclitus qui a te procedit illuminet et inducat in omnem, sicut tuus promisit Filius, ueritatem. Per Iesum Christum Dominum nostrum.

Lc. i. 3. OUR first Gospel begins with the human descent and birth of Jesus Christ; our second, with the ministry of John the Baptist. St Luke, true to his principle of 'tracing the course of all things from the first,' starts from the parentage and infancy of John, and his narrative reveals the fact that the birth of the Baptist was accompanied by a manifestation of the Spirit unparalleled in the life of the Jewish people since the days of the Maccabees¹.

Lc. i. 5 f., 39. I. The movement began in a priestly home in the hill country of Judaea, where the simple piety of the Old Testament was reflected in the lives of the aged priest Zacharias and his wife Elisabeth. Both were righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless. To these 'Israelites indeed' a heavenly messenger

Cf. Gen. vii. 1, xvii. 1.

¹ The Maccabean age recognized that prophets had ceased in Israel; cf. 1 Macc. iv. 46, ix. 27, xiv. 41; Ps. lxxiv. 9. Harnack (Mission u. Ausbreitung, I. p. 240 f., E. tr. I. p. 414 f.) condemns the notion that prophecy died out long before the Christian era, citing the case of Philo, the pre-Christian apocalyptic literature, and the references to false prophets in the Gospels. But admitting these exceptions, no outburst of prophecy such as St Luke records is known to have occurred before the eve of the Advent.

before in His sight in the spirit and power of Elijah, to turn fathers' hearts to children and disobedient men to walk in just men's wisdom, to make ready for the Lord a people prepared.

In these words the keynote of the Baptist's life is struck. It is to be replete with the presence and workings of the Divine Spirit; in the power of the Spirit it is to fulfil its mission of bringing Israel back to God by recalling the age of the fathers, the manners and life of the Prophets, the Kings, the Judges, the Patriarchs. That it may do this it must follow the best lines of Old Testament piety. John must be a Nazirite all his days; a new Samson, fitted by lifelong abstinence for the great feats of strength that belong to the consecrated life. The

² For this association of the ministry of conversion with the Holy Spirit cf. Ps. li. 13: the immediate reference, as Lc. i. 17 shews, is to Mal. iv. 6.

14 The Holy Spirit in the New Testament

Part I. i. exhilaration that comes from strong drink is to be unknown to him; from his infancy he is to be filled with a spiritual power which will supersede the use of stimulants. If in this respect he is to resemble Cf. Acts ii. 13 ff., Eph. v. 18. Samson, the work of his life is to be that of another and yet greater hero of the Old Testament, Elijah the Tishbite. The son of Zacharias and Elisabeth will be Malachi's revived Elijah; with Elijah's courage and force he will preach repentance in the days of Herod and Herodias, as Elijah had preached it to the northern kingdom in the reign of Ahab and Jezebel.

Mal. iv. 4f.
(LXX.).
xix. 10, 14.

After the birth of John both the parents of the Baptist shared at times the gift of the Spirit which was to be the lifelong endowment of their son. On the occasion of Mary's visit to her kinswoman, Elisabeth was filled with Holy Spirit, and enabled to interpret Mary's tidings with such clearness of insight that she recognized her at once as the mother of the Messiah. Zacharias experienced a like inspiration when at the naming of his son he prophesied. His 'prophecy'¹ is an echo of the message which he had received from Gabriel and had at the time disbelieved, but was now able to grasp and express in even clearer terms:

Lc. i. 41.

Lc. i. 43
(ἡ μήτηρ
τοῦ κυρίου
μου).
Lc. i. 67.

Lc. i. 76ff.

Yea, and thou, child, shalt be called 'Prophet of the Most High,'

For thou shalt go before in the sight of the Lord Part I. i.
to make ready his ways,
To give knowledge of salvation to his people
In remission of their sins.

The words carry us somewhat further than those of Gabriel, but do not go beyond the sphere of Old Testament teaching; the prophetic books of the Old Testament are full of a salvation in store for Israel, and even the reference to the remission of sins can be paralleled without difficulty. Zacharias speaks as any pious Israelite versed in the Psalms and prophetic books might have spoken in the Spirit.

Cf. Lc. i. 16 ff.

2. The child John fulfilled the promise of his birth. Men marvelled not only at the story of his birth, but also at the growing strength of his young life; the hand of the Lord was with him. The phrase again follows Old Testament lines, recalling scenes in the lives of Elijah and Elisha, whose feats of physical or spiritual strength are ascribed to 'the hand of Jahveh upon' them. In Ezekiel the inrush of prophetic inspiration¹ is repeatedly attributed to the same cause. The conception comes very near to the Old Testament view of the Spirit as the operative power of God, and in this sense the words are probably used by St Luke; but his choice of a preposition tempers the metaphor². The Hand

Part I. i. of God was 'with' the son of Zacharias; the childhood of John was not swept by great gusts of Divine afflatus, but rather it was guided and upheld by a Presence which made it both sweeter and stronger than childhood commonly is. The same thought is expressed more distinctly when it is added that the child grew and waxed strong in spirit. The spiritual faculties of his nature gained strength day by day, keeping pace with his physical growth. 'Spirit' is here the spiritual side of human life, in contrast with the animal or the merely intellectual. But the progressive strengthening of the spiritual life in man implies the action of the Spirit of God¹; it is not normal or automatic, like growth to physical maturity. The future Baptist was no ordinary boy; in him the development of body and spirit proceeded pari passu. In the sunshine of the Divine favour, under the quickening breeze of the Divine Spirit, the lad's powers of spiritual perception and activity ripened daily, even as his body was braced and matured by the air of the Judæan highlands where he had his home.

Lc. i. 80.

Meanwhile John was not wholly ignorant of his destiny; he could not have lived as a nazir without being aware that some special calling was upon him. By the time that he had reached maturity both his parents were probably dead², and the youth, left alone in the world, chose the life of an anchorite; he was in the deserts. Not far from his home the Essenes had their settlements, above the shores of the Dead Sea¹, over Engedi and Masada; and it has been hastily concluded that in early life John identified himself with this Jewish sect. But, as Bishop Lightfoot points out, "the rule of his life was isolation; the principle of theirs, community."² An Essene, then, he did not become, though like others of his time he may have been influenced by the asceticism of the Essenes³. Nor is it probable that his first move took him into the immediate neighbourhood of their resorts; the wilderness into which he retired at first was, it may be supposed, the uninhabited country beyond the suburbs of his native town. There he remained *till the day of his shewing*⁴ unto Israel, preparing himself by an ascetic life and a devout silence for the call to active work⁵.

⁵ The story has points of resemblance to that of Samuel's early life; see 1 Sam. i. 5, 11; iii. 19—iv. 1. Cf. Loisy, Les Évangiles Synoptiques, p. 315: "le rédacteur de cette notice...paraît être souvenu du jeune Samuel grandissant dans la retraite du sanctuaire, jusqu'à ce que sa réputation de prophète se répande dans tout Israël."

3. The call came to John as it had come to the old prophets, in 'a word of God' which addressed itself directly to his consciousness. St Luke uses once more a well-worn phrase from the Old Testament¹. As 'the word' had come to Elijah, so it came to his successor; John knew that he had heard in his spirit the Voice of God speaking to him, and that he stood in the Divine Presence, a servant called to do the bidding of the God of Israel. This word reached him through the Spirit, which had filled him from the beginning; but it was a new movement of the Spirit, and one which at once gave John a place in the great line of the ancient prophets. From that day all Israel knew that it had a prophet again. It was indeed a notable day in the life of the nation, and St Luke marks it by an elaborate effort to fix the date of the year in which it fell.

Mt. iii. 1.
Lc. iii. 3.

We enter now on ground which is common to the three Synoptists. But St Luke still has a source of information which neither the Second nor the First Gospel has used. There came John the Baptizer in the wilderness is all that St Mark has to tell; St Matthew adds that the wilderness was that of Judaea. St Luke is more precise: he came into all the circuit of the Jordan. The call drew him forth from the solitudes of the Judaeian highlands: he descended into the valley through which the Jordan drops into the Dead Sea. His purpose may have been twofold. In the first place, the Jordan valley was in direct communication with Jerusalem; thither people could flock to hear from his mouth the word of God. But further, the Jordan supplied the water necessary for a great baptismal rite. The 'word' which came to him had sent him not only to preach repentance but to baptize any who repented¹. He had no doubt as to the reality of his mission, yet he was conscious of its limitations. He could preach a baptism of repentance unto remission of sins, but had no authority to remit. He could baptize with water, but not with the Spirit. Himself full of the Spirit up to the measure of his capacity, he could not bestow the Spirit upon other men; his baptism was a bare recognition of a change of purpose which would purify and spiritualize life. For more than this the Baptist pointed to another, mightier than himself, for whom his mission was preparatory. In this propaedeutic purpose there lay the deeper aim of his ministry, which seems to have been revealed to him with a force of a second 'word of God.' It was not till his preaching of repentance had raised expectations which he was unable to fulfil that he began to speak of one who should come after him and baptize with the Holy Spirit. The same Voice which sent John to baptize with water guided him to the Person who possessed the fountain of the task was fulfilled, and he could welcome the waning

The Synoptists, or the primitive tradition which is behind the Synoptic Gospels, saw in the ministry of John the Baptist a fulfilment of ancient prophecy.
 In the words of the second Isaiah (xl. 1) he was the

 Jo. i. 23. Gospel the Baptist quoted the former passage in reference to himself, and the latter is applied to him in the Benedictus and even in the message of Gabriel to Zacharias. The new Prophet was conscious that he gave effect to the expectations of his predecessors² by preparing the way of the Christ. The Spirit which moved them to write moved John to act, and through his mission there was given to their words a fulfilment larger and greater than any that they could have imagined.

in these records of the early life and the ministry of John the Baptist is in accord both with the place of John in the order of events and with the Jewish-Christian origin of the records. It is also essentially of a piece with the teaching of the Old Testament. John was in fact what Jesus was supposed to be, 'a prophet as one of the prophets,' a true successor of the old Hebrew prophets, not so much of the prophets of the canon as of the non-literary seers who began with Samuel and culminated in Elijah and Elisha. In some respects he even recalled the earlier type of Old Testament heroes represented by Samson and the Judges. The Holy Spirit with which he was filled was not the new spirit of Christ and the Christian Church, but the spirit which gave to the saints of the Old Testament the strength and wisdom which was theirs; the spirit of Nazirite consecration, of absolute courage and loyalty to God, of utter self-abnegation; the spirit and power of Elijah, the Prophet-preacher of northern Israel. John was a prophet and more than a prophet; he rose to a level of moral grandeur never attained by the greatest of his predecessors; yet it was not given to him to enter the Kingdom of Heaven, or to taste the good things which were prepared for the members of Christ. He stood on the border of the promised land and from his Pisgah saw it with his eyes; he beheld the Spirit descend on the Christ and knew that this was the greater Baptist, who should baptize with the Holy Ghost. But he himself was not thus baptized, and, full as he was of the Spirit,

22 The Holy Spirit in the New Testament

Part I. i. there were mysteries in the spiritual life which he could not have understood. The Spirit was in John the Baptist as it was in the ancient Psalmists and Prophets, not as afterwards it dwelt in the Apostles and prophets of the New Testament, not as it now dwells in all believers; and it is among the evidences of the substantial truth of the Gospel records that the last of the prophets of Israel is represented as inspired by the Spirit of the Old Covenant, and not as he would have been depicted by the imagination of men who had tasted of the Pentecostal gift.

On the other hand the Spirit in the Baptist prepared the way of the Lord with greater directness and plainness of speech than in any of the prophets of the Old Testament. Even the Synop-tists represent John as preaching the near approach of the Kingdom of Heaven; creating expectations of the imminent coming of the Messiah, and thus 'proclaiming a gospel to the people,' i.e. to Israel. In the fourth Gospel Jesus is declared by him to be the Son of God, the Lamb of God, the Bridegroom of Israel, whose fame must grow while His forerunner waned. Thus the ministry of the Baptist was a link between the old order and the new, and when Jesus began to teach He took up the thread which John had been compelled to drop. In the Baptist the prophetic Spirit uttered its last testimony to Him that was to come, completing the witness of the Old Testament at the moment when the Christ was ready to enter upon His work.

I. THE third Gospel draws both a parallel and a contrast between the entrance into the world of the Forerunner and that of the Christ. Each is heralded by an annunciation, and in each case it is the archangel Gabriel to whom the message is entrusted. Moreover there is a strong general similarity between the opening words of the message to Zacharias and the message to Mary, which can be seen at a glance when they are printed side by side :

Lc. i. 13,

*Fear not, Zacharias, because thy supplication was heard, and thy wife Elisabeth shall bear a son to thee, and thou shalt call his name John.
...For he shall be great¹...*

*Fear not, Mary, for thou didst find favour with God,
and behold thou shalt conceive in thy womb,
and bear a son,
and shalt call his name Jesus.
He shall be great²...*

But as each message proceeds to unfold the greatness of the son who is to be born, a wide difference appears. John is to be a great Nazirite, a great prophet and preacher of repentance; Jesus shall be called Son of the Most High, and the Lord God¹ shall give him the throne of David his father, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his reign there shall be no end. Moreover, a pledge of this higher destiny is given in the greater wonder of the Lord's birth. The Virgin's question, How shall this be? is answered, There shall come upon thee Holy Spirit and the Most High's power shall overshadow thee; wherefore also that which is to be born shall be called holy², son of God³. For John the Forerunner it suffices that he shall be full of the Spirit from his mother's womb, whereas Jesus is to be conceived by the power of the Spirit in the womb, and for that reason (διό) is to bear titles such as could not be given to John.

At first sight Mary's question, How shall this be? appears to be the exact counterpart of Zacharias's, How shall I know this? But while the latter was due to unbelief⁴, the former, as the sequel shews, was called forth by the struggle to believe, and accordingly it was answered not by a rebuke but by the removal of the difficulty. The Angel explains that the ordinary operation of a natural law is in Mary's case to be superseded by the direct

Part I. ii. work of the Spirit of God. It is to be observed that, as elsewhere in the first chapter of St Luke, the answer is expressed in terms of the Old Testament. A 'holy spirit,' a breath of the Divine Spirit, shall fall upon Mary with an illapse sudden and irresistible; the verb used to describe the illapse (ἐπέρχεσθαι) is employed by the LXX. for the descent of a whirlwind, for the stirring of the mind by a fit of passion, for the refreshing breeze that springs up after a long spell of breathless heat¹. A 'power of the Most High' shall cast its shadow over her, even as the cloud of the Shekinah overshadowed the Tabernacle², working silently yet surely, with the gentleness of perfect strength.

The miracle of the Holy Conception is not altogether without parallel in the history of revelation. Physical effects are not infrequently ascribed by the writers of the Old Testament to the agency of the Spirit. The Spirit of God is represented as the cosmic force which operated upon the primaeval chaos; and as the vital energy which maintains the physical life in man³. Remarkable displays of bodily strength are ascribed to the action upon men of the Spirit of Jahveh. The Old Testament, moreover, has its marvellous births, such as that of Isaac, with which indeed a comparison is suggested by the last words of Gabriel's answer, *Nothing from God shall be impossible*¹. Isaac, according to St Paul, was 'born after the Spirit²,' i.e. by a special operation of Divine power. The analogy is incomplete, but to this extent it is sound; in the conception of our Lord, as in Isaac's case, we have an intervention of Divine 'power' which supplies the place of 'nature' in producing a physical result. In neither instance, however, is the result produced without the spiritual effort implied in the concurrence of the mother with the Divine Will. By faith even Sarah herself received power to conceive seed...since she counted him faithful who had promised; and precisely the same obedient faith is shewn in Mary's, Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it done to me according to thy word. In each case moral strength was imparted first, as the condition upon which physical power followed; by faith Mary, no less than Sarah, *received power*³.

One vast difference distinguishes the Conception of our Lord from other miraculous conceptions. It not only implied moral and spiritual power in the mother, but it gave an unexampled character to the child. The Holy Spirit sanctified the flesh on which it wrought. Of the Child of Mary while yet unborn

³ This was seen by the earliest constructive theologian of the Church: see Irenaeus, iii. 22, 4; v. 19. 1.

Part I. ii. (τὸ γεννώμενον)¹, it is said that He shall be known as holy, even as son of God. His unique conception, without human paternity, means that He is to hold this unique position in human history. The words must be understood not as revealing the Divine nature of our Lord as it was taught by St Paul and St John and dogmatically by the post-Apostolic Church, but with reference to their context and to the beliefs of the Jewish-Christian circle in which they were handed down. The Angel's words base the sanctity and Divine sonship of Mary's child not on His preexistence but on His conception by the Divine Spirit². This does not exclude other and deeper reasons for His claim to the titles attributed to Him, but it certainly makes the Holy Conception one reason and the most obvious. Must not that Child be³ holy and son of God who had no earthly father, whose mother was overshadowed by the Power of the Most High? Paternity is not, of course, ascribed to the Holy Spirit by this process of thought⁴, for the Holy Spirit is not hypostatized in the early narratives of St Luke. God, working by His Spirit, is the Father of the humanity of Jesus, in the sense that its origination from the substance of the Virgin Mother was a Divine act. The result of this Divine intervention is to be seen in the human life of the Lord; in His sinlessness, His entire consecration, His sense of the Fatherhood of God, from the dawn of consciousness to His last breath. The entail of sin was broken at last, and one born of a woman was, even as man, holy and a son of God.

⁴ On this point see Pearson ad loc.: "because the Holy Ghost did not beget him by any communication of his essence, therefore he is not the father of him": compare his note in reference to Tertullian de carne 18 and Hilary trin. ii. 26. The maternity ascribed to the Holy Spirit in the Hebrew Gospel

Part I. ii.

2. When we turn to our other New Testament authority for the Miraculous Conception, the opening chapter of St Matthew's Gospel, the whole setting of the narrative is found to be different. No comparison is instituted here between John and Jesus; the first Gospel does not concern itself with the Forerunner until the time comes when he begins actively to prepare the way of his Successor. St Matthew's interest lies wholly in presenting Jesus as the predestined King of Israel. This is the purpose of the pedigree which precedes and of the story of the Magi which follows his reference to the Conception, and it is kept well in view in the account of the Conception itself.

Mt. i. 18—

In St Matthew the annunciation is made to Joseph, and it follows in point of time the annunciation made in St Luke to Mary, for it represents the

Part I. ii. Conception as an accomplished fact¹. An angel (who is not said to have been Gabriel) is sent to Joseph to assist him in forming a right judgement upon a fact already known to him. Joseph is accosted as a son of David, and the title may have served to remind him that Mary's child, if acknowledged by him, could claim a place in the royal line.

Mt. i. 20 f. But a higher destiny in fact awaits this child. That which was begotten in her is of Holy Spirit; and she shall bear a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he it is who shall save his people from their sins. This whole occurrence, the Evangelist comments, was intended to fulfil the word of Jahveh spoken by the prophet Isaiah:

(τοῦτο δὲ
ἔλον γέγονεν Ἰνα).

Isa. vii. 14.

And they shall call his name Emmanuel.*

St Luke makes no allusion to this prophecy; to St Matthew, with his keener eye for Old Testament anticipations of the Gospel history, it seemed to be a verbal prediction of the circumstances of the miraculous conception. But it was more than this. The words were spoken to Ahaz, King of Judah, at a crisis when the enemies of Judah were conspiring to dethrone the House of David; the birth of the virgin's son, whatever the exact reference may have been, was to be a sign that God was with His people and with the royal line. Such a sign, but with a larger and deeper meaning, was given to Israel by the Conception and Birth of Jesus. His very name pointed Him out as a living pledge of God's Presence with Israel; as Himself a Deliverer sent to save Israel from enemies worse than Rezin and Pekah, a Christ-King come to reign over the people of the Lord.

Part I. ii.

All this is peculiar to St Matthew, and it is in accordance with the special purpose of the first Gospel. But the two records, though covering different ground, and approaching the subject from different points of view, are absolutely one in ascribing the Conception of Mary's Son to a Divine act. Twice in Mt. i. 18—21 we are told that Mary conceived ἐκ πνεύματος ἁγίου¹—of, from, Holy Spirit. The prepositional clause represents, even more clearly than the words of St Luke, that the Spirit was the source of the vitalizing energy which gave life to the embryo in Mary's womb. It is at least possible that the writer of the first Gospel borrowed this mode of speaking from the use of his own Church; certainly it is found in the old Creed of the Roman Church².

It does not belong to the present enquiry to consider the credibility of the Gospel narratives of the Conception. The narratives are in any case a true part of the first and third Gospels as we have received them, and they form a most important feature in the history of the work of the Holy Spirit as it is given in the New Testament. In this act the Spirit is seen presiding over the beginnings of a new creation. As in the beginning of cosmic life, as in the first quickening of the higher life in man, so at the outset of the new order which the Incarnation inaugurated, it belonged to the Divine Spirit to set in motion the great process which was to follow. The first and third Gospels, in tracing this new departure in human history to a unique operation of Holy Spirit, are in line with the Biblical accounts of the Spirit's action in the creation of the world and of man¹. In the new world, in the New Man, as in the old, life begins with the Breath of God².

² The Roman Creed of the second century used the same preposition in reference to both the Spirit and the mother (τὸν γεννηθέντα ἐκ πνεύματος ἁγίου καὶ Μαρίας τῆς παρθένου, qui natus est de Spiritu sancto et Maria uirgine). Compare Mt. i. 16 ἐξ ἧς ἐγεννήθη with v. 20 τὸ ἐν αὐτῇ γεννηθὲν ἐκ πνεύματός ἐστιν ἁγίου, and Ignatius, Eph. 18 ἐκ σπέρματος μὲν Δαβὶδ, πνεύματος δὲ ἁγίου

Lc. i. 41.

3. The birth of our Lord is not represented by the canonical Gospels as in itself miraculous or attended by any special signs of Divine power³. The miracle lay in the Conception and not in the birth of Jesus; birth followed under ordinary conditions. It was however preceded and followed by another outburst of prophecy. Elisabeth was filled with Holy Spirit when the Virgin visited her, and the Virgin herself, if she answered Elisabeth with the impromptu ode attributed to her in the Greek text of Luke i. 46, was certainly under the same influence. In Latin texts, however, 'Elisabeth' is widely read for 'Mary,' and there is reason to suspect that neither name stood in the earliest copies, in which case it has been held that 'Elisabeth' and not 'Mary' must be supplied. On the other hand there is much force in the reply that the words All generations shall count me blessed are more suitable to the mother of the Christ than to the mother of the Forerunner¹. In either case the Magnificat must be regarded as an inspired song, and a witness to the spiritual activity which prevailed in the circle to which both Elisabeth and Mary belonged². This activity, according to the third Gospel, continued after the birth of our Lord, and was extended to a group of devout Jews who, in St Luke's words, were expecting consolation for Israel, and a deliverance of Jerusalem, at the coming of the King Messiah. To this little band of faithful men and women, the true successors of those whom the ancient prophets comforted in the days of the Babylonian exile, the Holy Spirit spoke by Symeon of Jerusalem and Hannah of the tribe of Asher. Hannah's psalm of praise when she saw the Infant in the Temple is lost, but Symeon's has, like ² It is assumed that the Song is what it is represented to be, and not a Jewish-Christian hymn put into the mouth of Mary or Elisabeth, or the work of the Evangelist himself.

34 The Holy Spirit in the New Testament

- Part I. ii. Benedictus and Magnificat, passed from St Luke's Gospel into the daily offices of the Church, in which it has been sung since the fourth century¹. Hannah was known as 'a prophetess'; whether Symeon had a reputation of this kind does not appear, but he was
- Lc. ii. 25 f. to all intents a prophet; Holy Spirit was on him; he was conscious of having received an oracular intimation (ἦν αὐτῷ κεχρηματισμένον) from the Holy Spirit that he should live to see the Anointed of the Lord²; it was the Spirit that moved him to enter the Precinct at the moment of the Presentation; the Spirit breathes in every word of the Nunc Dimittis, and his words to Mary are a formal prediction in

4. Of the infancy of Jesus after the return to Nazareth, the canonical Gospels, exercising a wise reserve, have nothing to tell³. The two notices of His childhood in St Luke, though they do not mention the Holy Spirit, are sufficient evidence of the Spirit's continued action upon His opening life.

- Lc. ii. 40. The first relates to His early years at Nazareth: the child grew and waxed strong, being ever more and more filled⁴ with wisdom, and God's favour was upon

³ The portents and precocious sayings attributed to the child-Christ in the Gospels of the Infancy present a contrast to this reserve which has often been pointed out, but they exhibit no true sign of spiritual life.

⁴ πληρούμενον not πεπληρωμένον or πληρωθέν; the filling, like

ii. Again the Evangelist mentally compares the Messiah with His Forerunner; the first words of his account are identical with those which he had used of the childhood of the Baptist¹. But more is said of the Child of Mary than of the child of Elisabeth; in the former the strengthening of the spiritual nature by the Divine Spirit² was shewn by a growing fulness of wisdom: the wisdom of a child, it is true—for when He was a child He “spake as a child, thought as a child, reasoned as a child”—but of a child without childish faults and follies, whose words and thoughts and judgements, while they were such as became His age³, fulfilled the ideal of childhood, so that at each stage in His growth nothing was wanting to complete the development of mind and character proper to that stage. And the Divine favour was upon the Child, whether we understand by χάρις θεοῦ the complacency with which God must regard a sinless life in child or man, or the ‘grace’ with which He enriches nature in His elect⁴.

So the Child grew into the Boy and the Boy into the Man, the intellectual and spiritual growth keeping pace with the physical. Jesus advanced Lc. ii. 52.

the physical growth, was progressive. Contrast Rom. xv. 14, Phil. i. 11, Col. ii. 10, and compare Eph. v. 18.

Part I. ii. continually¹ in wisdom and stature and favour with God and men. If the ascetic and strenuous youth of John reminded the Evangelist of Samson, Jesus recalls to his memory the gentler Samuel, whose mother's song has suggested much of the Magnificat. The Son of Mary at Nazareth, as the son of Hannah at Ramah, became the favourite of His fellow-townsmen, while He was increasingly conscious of the abiding favour of God.

5. One glimpse of His boyhood was given to the Rabbis at Jerusalem. At the age of twelve He was again taken to the Temple. No Symeon or Hannah was there to greet Him on this occasion; but it did not need the utterance of a prophet now to point Him out. The Boy was distinguished from other boys by spiritual gifts which in the atmosphere of the Temple manifested themselves to all that heard. Even the masters of Israel were for the moment lifted above the level of their solemn trifling by the marvel of His intelligence² as it was revealed by His answers. There was no attempt on His part to take, with the precocity of premature knowledge, the place of the teacher; He was content to ask for information, but His questions and the answers which He gave when questions were put to Him by the Rabbis disclosed an 'apprehension of the bearings of things,' a grasp of spiritual truth, which in one so young amazed even experienced teachers. Both His questions and His answers have perished. But one utterance¹ survives, and it is a revelation of the deepest secret of the Boy's heart. To His parents, distressed by His disappearance and disposed to resent it, His only answer was, Why was it that you sought me? Knew you not that in the house of my Father I needs must be? The consciousness of a unique relation to God, and an over-mastering enthusiasm for the spiritual and eternal, had begun to overshadow all earthly interests. Yet, as the sequel shews, they were not suffered to interfere with the obligations of human life, and the next eighteen years are summed up in the amazing words, *He was subject to them*². Thus the Spirit in the Boy is seen at once illuminating thought and prompting to duty; opening the mind to the mysteries of God, and at the same time urging the regular discharge of the responsibilities of an obscure and monotonous life.

² On σύνεσις see Lightfoot on Col. i. 9: "σύνεσις 'intelligence' is critical: apprehends the bearings of things"; it may thus imply "a tentative, partial, approach to σοφία." In the Boy Jesus σοφία was already present (ii. 40, 52), but glimpses of it only were caught by those who heard Him in the Temple.

Part I. iii.

Lc. iii. 23.

THE Holy Spirit, by which the Sacred Humanity was conceived, working upon it during the years of immaturity, had brought it at length to the fullness of its powers. The preparation was long, extending far beyond the attainment of manhood, for the manhood of Jesus was to be at its best and strongest before He entered on His short public ministry. When he began (ἀρχόμενος), he was about¹ thirty years of age. There does not appear to have been any formal or technical reason for the choice of the thirtieth year; it may have been in early times the superior limit of the term of Levitical service², but if so, the limit had been pushed further back, first perhaps to twenty-five, and then to twenty years. On the other hand the Rabbis did not enter upon their office before forty³, and this was, according to Irenaeus⁴, the magistri actas perfecta. The Lord was subject to no such restrictions, and when He knew in His spirit that the time had come to take up His public work, He came forward to do so. It was no conventional rule that guided Him, but the Holy Spirit working in the sphere of His human consciousness⁵.

1. The tidings reached Nazareth that the prophet John had begun to preach repentance in the valley of the Jordan, and that Judaea and Jerusalem were flocking to him. Jesus recognized the call, and set forth for the Jordan, with the purpose, as our first Gospel says, of seeking baptism from John. We may imagine Him as crossing the Esdraelon valley from Nazareth, then following the course of the Jordan past Scythopolis (Bethshean), and finally reaching the outskirts of the crowd of pilgrims which marked the presence of the Baptist; the spot may have been either at the north end of the Jordan valley, at Bethany or Aenon, or perhaps at the traditional locality near Jericho where the Jordan is preparing to empty itself into the Dead Sea¹.

John, it appears, had entered on the second stage of his ministry, in which he spoke plainly of a greater Successor. There comes (he had said) he that is stronger than I after me, the strap of whose shoes I am not fit to stoop and unloose. I baptized you with water, but he shall baptize you with Holy Spirit. And with fire, St Matthew and St Luke add², but the words are perhaps due to recollections of the Pentecost, or a reference to the unquenchable fire which is mentioned in the context; if they are genuine, the Baptist may have had in mind Malachi iii. 2 f. tale for which the Gospel according to the Hebrews appears to have been responsible (Hieron. c. Pelag. iii. 2, see p. 39, col. 2).

Part I. iii. or Isa. iv. 4. The point is not important ; what is material is the Baptist's explicit claim for his Successor that He has the power to baptize with (or 'in') *Holy Spirit*¹. The fourth Gospel explains that John knew this by express revelation ; the same Divine Voice which bade him baptize in the Jordan, spoke of another who should baptize with the Holy Spirit. Spiritual baptism was the promised blessing of the Messianic age, and it was the prerogative of the Messiah to bestow it.

25 ff. ;

It was at this moment that the Messiah Himself came to seek the baptism of water. John, according to the fourth Gospel, did not recognize his kinsman ; nor is there any improbability in this, if we remember that the Baptist had been in the wilderness through the greater part of our Lord's life at Nazareth. He may indeed never have met Jesus hitherto. On the other hand, the first Gospel represents the Baptist as not merely recognizing Jesus but seeking to prevent Him from submitting to baptism : John would have hindered him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and dost thou (σύ) come to me? The Lord's answer—His second recorded utterance —was, Let it be so now, for after this manner it is becoming for us to fulfil all righteousness. Such sayings cannot be attributed to the imagination of the legend-maker ; they bear the stamp of originality. John shrinks with characteristic humility from exercising his office on one who could give the baptism of the Spirit. Jesus, without disclaiming the power attributed to Him, puts the objection on one side as irrelevant in present circumstances; it was appropriate to His present earthly life that He should omit no act of homage that man can pay to the ordinance of God. Upon this John ceases to oppose; Jesus follows the crowd to the place of baptism, and is baptized in the Jordan¹, perhaps last of all, or when the crowd had dispersed².

2. The Baptism itself was not marked by any special manifestation, for the early addition to the canonical narrative which states that the water was illuminated by fire, or by a great light that seemed to rise from it³, is probably no more than a legend of second century growth. It was an act of humble submission on the part of our Lord, and not of self-glorification. But it was immediately followed by a fresh illapse of the Spirit upon the newly-baptized. The work of righteousness performed, Jesus at once ascended from the water. As He went up He

With it may be compared the incident which follows the Baptism in the Ebionite Gospel (καὶ εὐθὺς περιέλαμψε τὸν τόπον φῶς μέγα: cf. the addition to Mt. iii. 15 in the O. L. cod. a ("et cum baptizaretur lumen magnum circumfulsit de aqua ita ut timerent omnes qui aduenerant").

44 The Holy Spirit in the New Testament

- Part I. iii. prayed¹, and while He prayed there came to Him a vision, which was shared, as the fourth Gospel tells us, by the Baptist. The heavens seemed to be torn asunder (σχιζομένων Mc.), like a veil rent in twain², and from the sanctuary within the veil there floated down a dove, or that which had the appearance of a dove³. With the vision there came a voice which in the Lord's consciousness if not in the Baptist's shaped itself into the words, Thou art my Son, the Beloved; in thee I am well pleased, or, in St Mc. i. 11. Matthew's later form⁴, This is my Son...in whom I am well pleased; another tradition, preserved in the Mt. iii. 17. 'Western' text of St Luke, substitutes for the last words, *I this day have begotten thee*⁵. The fourth Gospel does not mention the Voice, for it gives the Baptist's account; the third Gospel seems (perhaps only seems) to materialize the vision of the dove⁶.
- Lc. iii. 22.

⁵ Ps. ii. 7; cf. Acts xiii. 33 where the words are quoted with reference to the Resurrection. The Ebionite Gospel, it will be observed, seeks to combine the two traditions: "there came a Voice...saying, 'In thee I am well pleased,' and again, 'I this day have begotten thee.'" On John's exclaiming, Who art thou, Lord? this Voice speaks a third time and returns to the form first used.

But the four Gospels agree that the dove was but a symbol of the Holy Spirit, and that it was the Spirit and not the dove which descended and abode on the Christ¹. The dove was the visible sign which drew attention to the illapse of the invisible Spirit; the Spirit was not in the dove, even as afterwards on the Pentecost it was not in the wind or the fire.

3. So much is plain. But it is not so easy to correlate the descent of the Spirit upon Jesus immediately after His baptism with the previous activities of the Spirit in His Conception and His early life. The baptismal descent admits of more than one interpretation. To the Ebionite Christian the Baptism of the Lord was the moment at which He received His Messianic sonship; to certain Christian Gnostics, the descent of the Spirit was the descent of the Christ upon the man Jesus. The Catholic Church, on the other hand, held that from the moment of His Conception Jesus was the Son of God, who as man was in all things guided and controlled by the Spirit of God². But if so, what room was there for a fresh consecration, a new flooding of His human life with the Holy Spirit? What explanation is to be given, not of the περιστεράν. But σωματικὸν εἶδος is not necessarily a material form: rather it is the semblance of that which is material, as the ὥς which follows suggests.

² Cf. e.g. Iren. iii. 10, 11.

Part I. iii. Baptism itself, for that is sufficiently explained by our Lord's answer to John, but of the great illapse of the Spirit which followed it? This question has been anticipated by St Luke, the historian of the Holy Conception. The Baptism marked a new beginning in the life of our Lord. As His Conception was the beginning of His human existence, so was the Baptism of His ministry. The Messiah was about to enter on His official life, and at this new ἀρχή, this inception of His Messianic work, He must receive a new outpouring of the Spirit. As He had been conceived by the Spirit, so He must now be anointed by the Spirit for His supreme office as the Prophet, the Priest, the King of the Israel of God.

Yet the Baptism, it is plain, was not a public inauguration, nor did the vision and the voice which followed it serve the purpose of bearing witness to the nation that the Messiah had come. The crowds who were baptized on the same occasion saw and heard nothing, even if they were present at His baptism; there was no manifestation which addressed itself to the outward eye or ear. John indeed bore witness to the vision which he had seen, and the Lord carried away with Him from the Jordan a consciousness of the Father's testimony which was a constant source of inward strength: the Father who sent me, He exclaims, he hath borne witness concerning me.

Jo. i. 34. To believers also for all time the Spirit and the Water of the Baptism are among the abiding evidences of the Messiahship of Jesus. But it is inconceivable

Lc. iii. 23
νος).

Jo. v. 37.

that the purpose of the Baptism and the Descent of the Spirit was to impress the Jewish people generally with the conviction that the Christ was among them. As it is described in the Gospels, no scene could have been less likely to produce such an effect; any who may have witnessed it saw nothing but a peasant from Galilee receiving amongst hundreds of other Jews the baptism of repentance; if they saw the dove, there would be nothing to connect it with the Holy Spirit; if they heard the voice they doubtless said, as another crowd on a similar occasion, that it had thundered. The Baptism was an inauguration of the Ministry only in the sense that it invested Jesus with new powers and a new mission. It was the spiritual, invisible, but effectual anointing of the Christ with Holy Spirit and power for His unique work: not for the Ministry only but for the whole term of the Messianic office, which is not even now completed but continues to the end of the present age. The Spirit came at the Baptism to abide upon Jesus as the Christ, and to be in Him the source of illumination and strength for those whom He in His turn should baptize. This vital point in the interpretation of the history comes to light in the fourth Gospel, where the Baptist witnesses, I have beheld the Spirit descending as a dove out of heaven, and it abode upon him...He who sent me to baptize in water, he said to me, Upon whomsoever thou shalt see the Spirit descending and abiding upon him, this is he that baptizes in Holy Spirit. The independent witness of the Gospel according to the Part I. iii. Hebrews¹ is almost more striking: *it came to pass that when the Lord had ascended from the water, the whole fountain of Holy Spirit descended and rested on him*², and said to him, My Son, in all the prophets I looked for thee that thou mightest come and I might rest in thee; for thou art my Rest, thou art my Son, my First-born, who art king for evermore. There may be some confusion of thought in this early Jewish-Christian view of the Baptism, but in its insistence on the completeness and permanence³ of the endowment of the Christ-King it is a noble comment on the words reported by St John. In one respect, however, it falls far behind them, for it makes no direct reference to the chief purpose of the Messianic Anointing. The chrism of the Spirit was received by our Lord not only with reference to His own needs, but that He might bestow it on all believers. The whole fountain of the Spirit is henceforth His, to shower upon His future Church. St John works out this point in his first Epistle: *you have an anointing (χρίσμα) from the Holy...the anointing which you received from him abides in you*⁴...his anointing teaches you concerning all things. But the thought is not limited to St John. St Paul speaks in similar language: it is

I. "THE Baptism," it has been said, "marks the point of complete apprehension by the Lord's human mind of the fulness of all that He was, and the function which it was His to fill in the divinely ordered life of the world¹." It was also the occasion of His investment with the spiritual powers which enabled Him to fill it. These new powers were presently to be brought into exercise and tested to the uttermost by the public Ministry and the Passion. But before the Ministry began, there came an interval of preparatory discipline which was spent in solitude. Immediately after the vision and the Voice the Spirit urges him to go forth into the wilderness. So the second Gospel, after its vivid manner; the first says less graphically but to the same effect, Then was Jesus led up into the wilderness by the Spirit, and the third likewise. In both statements the nature of the Spirit's action on the newly anointed Christ is clearly seen; it is a pressure exerted upon His spirit, a strong lead given to His mind and will. Under either aspect it seems to have been a new experience in the human life of Jesus; the fervour and exaltation which it implies are in marked contrast with the quiet years at Nazareth, while they accord well with the new rôle which had been initiated by the Baptism. The 'wilderness,' whether it is to be identified with the traditional Quarantania on the west of the Jordan, or with the Moabite or Judæan highlands, offered conditions which lent themselves to the purposes of a Prophet preparing for a great ministry; and in for the perfecting of His own humanity¹; it was a first step in the fulfilment of His official work, and the necessary foundation of all that followed. The Temptation holds an essential place in the salvation of mankind. Even if it be held that the Fall is a legend and the first Adam a mythical character, the fact of human sin remains, and sin is a moral defeat which must be reversed if men are to be saved. Moreover, it must be reversed by Man and in Man, as it was sustained by and in Man. Mere sinlessness, unless it were tested by temptation, would not be such a victory; the Second Man must not only be without sin; He must have encountered Sin and overcome it. Further, there was an obvious necessity that the first great victory should be won before the Lord's official life began. The work of that life was to expel the powers of evil which had gained the upper hand in the world, and He who would do this must first repel an attack made by them upon Himself. No one can enter into the house of the strong and spoil his goods, unless he first bind the strong; and then he will spoil his house. The issue of the Temptation was the binding of Satan by the Christ, and the first consequences of this binding are seen in the spoiling of Satan's house which began in the towns and villages of Galilee, and is in process to this day wherever Christ works through His Church. But the impulse, the guidance which led to both the binding and the spoiling is to be ascribed, according to the synoptic Gospels, Part I. iv. to the Spirit by which Jesus was anointed to the Christ-life.

2. Though the Gospels are silent upon the matter¹, it cannot be doubted that the Spirit which urged the Lord to the conflict with Satan strengthened Him for it and carried Him through. Even the quasi-apocalyptic symbolism of the story, as it stands in the first and third Gospels², reveals indications of an extraordinary elevation of spirit which argues some special action of the Spirit of God, such as the power to live by the food of the divine word, to overleap the horizon which bounds vision³, to transport oneself into conditions or surroundings other than those which exist in actual experience. When from these signs of an abnormal spiritual life we turn to the three acts of the great drama, the Spirit makes its presence yet more evident. It is seen in the insight which discerns the subtle danger that underlies an apparently innocent exercise of Messianic power; in the strength of will which resists the impatience that grasps at an end without regard to the means by which the end is reached; in the humility which, though fully conscious of a unique relation to God, refuses while in the flesh to transcend the limitations of mortal weakness. In all this we may reverently recognize the hand of the Spirit of God upholding and guiding the humanity of our Lord, and giving promise to us of a like support and direction in our own temptations. For if He has been in all points tempted similarly to ourselves¹ it is reasonable to infer, as the writer to the Hebrews has done, that we are assured of His full sympathy and powerful succour in our time of need. One profound difference separates Him from ourselves; in Him there was no uncontrolled desire which when it has conceived brings forth sin; the suggestions of evil came only from without. But they came in the most subtle and persuasive forms, appealing to the noblest instincts and the highest aims; to resist them, we may believe, cost Him even more than resistance to temptation costs other men. Yet the strength by which He resisted was not other than that by which we ourselves may conquer. If the human spirit of our Lord detected the true nature of the suggestions which were made to it and repelled them, it did so in the power of the Holy Spirit, and not simply by the force of a sinless human will.

3. The temptation being completed and the Tempter having *departed for a season*², Jesus returned to Galilee. The return, as it appears from St Luke, began immediately after the Baptism, but

Part I. iv. had been interrupted by the Divine impulse which led Him into the wilderness¹. Now it is resumed, for the wilderness has no further claim upon Him, whereas Galilee is calling for His ministry. The Spirit is with Him still, but in a new way; not now urging Him to a life of solitude, but on the contrary impelling Him to public work; not merely arming Him for spiritual conflicts (though these had not ceased, or at best were but suspended), but endowing Him with the power of strenuous action. The same Spirit which in the wilderness overcame the Evil One now equipped Him for the public ministry².

Lc. iv. 14. Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee. St Luke, to whom we owe this fresh reference to the Spirit, evidently means his readers to understand that it covers the whole of the Lord's ministerial life, for he brings into close connexion with it the discourse in the synagogue at Nazareth, which belongs, as we gather from St Mark, to a later period, but is appropriate here as striking the keynote of the entire ministry. The text of the discourse is the classical passage in the Second Isaiah where the Prophet of the Exile speaks in glowing words of the greatness of his commission. The Spirit of the Lord is upon *me*¹; because² the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord³. Jesus, having read thus far, folded up the roll of Isaiah and began, To-day has this scripture been fulfilled in your ears. Another Prophet of the captivity, another Evangelist of the poor, the crushed, and the prisoner, another Preacher of a year of grace is here this day; and He also has been anointed by the Spirit for His work. Thus the Lord Himself traces to the Messianic Anointing which He had received the whole of the illuminating, remedial, liberating work of the years between the Baptism and the Passion. The consciousness of that great outpouring of the Spirit was the strength of His preaching, of His marvellous works, and of His personal life.

(a) The preaching of our Lord was in the power of the Spirit. A new teaching, the crowds exclaimed; but its novelty lay not so much in the substance of what He taught as in the spiritual force with which His message was delivered. He taught them as one having authority and not as their scribes. The Scribes taught in the oldness of the letter; if they went beyond what had been said by earlier Rabbis, it

Part I. iv. was but to set up a stronger 'fence' round the Law, and to add one more burden to a weight which already was grievous to be borne. On the other hand, the words of Jesus came to His own generation as they come to men still, with the freshness of the breath of heaven; they are spirit and are life. Whether He taught the multitudes in parables, or delivered the new law of liberty to His disciples, or gave commandment to His chosen Apostles, the Spirit of God, it was plain, spoke by His lips. The word of the Lord did not come to Him at intervals, as it came to the prophets of old; all that He said was said in the Spirit. It was the consciousness of this perfect inspiration that moved Him on the eve of His Passion to say with full conviction, The heaven and the earth shall pass, but my words shall not pass. Spoken by human lips and in the terms of human life, all His words were spoken in the power of the Spirit of God.

(b) The 'signs' which attended the Ministry of Jesus¹ are attributed by our Lord Himself to the Holy Spirit. To ascribe them to the unclean spirit Beelzebub was a worse sin than to speak evil of the Son of Man; it was to blaspheme the Spirit of God. With the finger of God I cast out the demon-spirits, He said to the Pharisees, using a metaphor which the Pentateuch and the Psalms apply to the Divine Spirit¹, and which the writer of the first Gospel actually interprets in this way². When in the fourth Gospel Jesus says, The Father abiding in me doeth his works, He asserts the same principle, and extends it to all the acts of His Ministry; for it is by the Spirit that God abides in humanity. This truth was grasped after the Pentecost by those who had witnessed the miracles, e.g. by St Peter when he tells Cornelius how God anointed Jesus with Holy Spirit and power, who went through the land doing good and healing all who were being overpowered³ by the Devil; for God was with him. The miracles were signs of the Presence of God with Jesus, of the Spirit that dwelt in Him⁴, which was stronger than the power of evil and could set its victims free.

(c) Lastly, in the personal life of the Lord, as it is revealed in His Ministry, the Holy Spirit is seen to inspire every movement of thought and will. One who lived under the scrutiny of all eyes and yet could challenge His worst enemy to convict

⁴ The ninth anathema of Cyril condemns only such an undue insistence upon this intervention of the Spirit in the miracles of Christ as might seem to imply that they were wrought by a power which was not essentially His own.

Part I. iv. Him of sin, and even dare to appeal to the Searcher of hearts, must indeed have been conscious of being in perfect harmony with the Spirit of God. The Gospels do not stop to point out what is proclaimed aloud by the whole history. Yet on one unique occasion the place of the Holy Spirit in the daily life of the Lord is recognized by St Luke, to whom, it will be remembered, we owe more than one of the references which the Gospels make to the Spirit in His relation to Jesus Christ¹. In that hour, he writes—the hour of hope and promise when the Seventy returned with a report of the power they had exercised over unclean spirits—Jesus exulted in the Holy² Spirit. It was perhaps the only occasion of this kind in the days of His flesh. The Lord's human heart bounded within Him as He saw the Divine counsels fulfilling themselves through the feeble efforts of His simplest disciples. It was human joy, but not merely human; this great throb of exultation came to Him 'in the Holy Spirit': through the power which the Spirit gave Him in that hour of transcending human thought, and seeing present things in the light of their eternal issues³.

4. The Ministry was followed and consummated by the Passion. If the Spirit led our Lord into the wilderness for His first great conflict and victory, it is not overbold to believe that it led Him also to the last struggle with evil, and to the final triumph. This fact surely lies only just below the surface of the mysterious words which describe His conduct at certain moments in the long way to the Cross. His repeated predictions of the Passion: His stern rebuke of Peter, when by dissuading the Lord from the Cross he shewed that he 'minded not the things of God but the things of men'; the set face, the vehemence of manner which, as St Peter long afterwards remembered, startled and alarmed the Twelve as they followed in His steps; the prayer which rose thrice from the olive trees in Gethsemane with its burden, Not what I will but what Thou wilt: the last act by which the Lord dismissed His human spirit and completed the sacrifice of His life—all these are indications not only of a conflict more severe and far more sustained than the Temptation in the wilderness, but of a strength and a conquest in which the Spirit of God cooperated with the sinless spirit of the Son of Man. It does not need any verbal statement on the part of the Evangelists to assure us of this: the fact is self-evident from a consideration of the whole history of our Lord's life. Through an eternal spirit, as the writer to the Hebrews says, He offered Himself to God. The Sacrifice of the Cross was consummated by the act of our Lord's own human spirit, which was so penetrated and elevated by the Spirit of God that it lived in the eternal and invisible, and was able to 'endure the cross, despising shame.'

One striking incident, peculiar to St John, which shews us the risen Manhood breathing forth the Spirit on the Apostles and their company, will be considered in the second part of this book, in connexion with the Lord's teaching upon that occasion. But the Gospels do not lead us far into the mystery of the post-Resurrection life; what the New Testament has to teach about it will come into fuller view when we examine the witness of the Acts, the Epistles, and the Apocalypse.

IF St Luke's 'former treatise' gave prominence to the work of the Holy Spirit in the days of the Son of Man, its sequel, the Acts, is wholly occupied with the work of the Spirit in the life of the Church during the thirty years that followed the Lord's departure¹.

1. The Book of the Acts takes up the thread of the story just before the point at which the Gospel had dropped it. It begins with a brief summary of the Forty Days, adding a fuller account of the Ascension. These introductory verses (i. 1—12) mark the transition from the earthly Ministry of the Lord (ὧν ἡρξάτο Ἰησοῦς ποιεῖν τε καὶ διδάσκειν) to the Ministry of the Spirit which was to follow His Ascension. The earthly Ministry
 Lc. iv. 14. had been from the first in the power of the Spirit, as the Gospel has taught us; and the Acts opens with an intimation that this continued to the end; the last injunctions to the Apostles were given, it is noted, *through Holy Spirit*¹; the Messianic inspiration was upon the Risen Christ as it had been upon the Christ of the Ministry, and was perhaps enhanced by the more spiritual conditions of the Resurrection life².

In these interviews before the Ascension the Lord's mind seems to have recalled the days of His own Baptism and Anointing by the Holy Spirit. He knew that a like event was about to occur in the history of the Church; her baptism with the Spirit was at hand. The Eleven were charged not to leave Jerusalem but to wait there for the fulfilment of the Father's promise; *for John indeed baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized³ in Holy Spirit not many days hence*⁴. As to the time of the

² Cf. Hastings' D. C. G. i. 736 b f.: [the remark in Acts i. 2] "seems to suggest that with the Resurrection the dispensation of the Holy Spirit began, and that the disciples were conscious, as they listened to the new and final charge of the Lord, that they were in contact, as they never had been before, with the powers of the world to come."

Part I. v. establishment of the Messianic Kingdom He had nothing to say; it was in the Father's hands. It was enough for them to know what directly concerned their own immediate future, and the discharge of their duty in it. Ye shall receive power when the Holy Spirit has come upon you¹, and ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem and in all Judaea and Samaria and unto the end of the earth. As the Lord's own Baptism had been followed by His Ministry in Galilee, so the Baptism of the Church was to be preparatory to a world-wide ministry: a ministry not, like His own, creative of a new order, but one of simple testimony; yet only to be fulfilled in the power of the Spirit of God².

2. During the days of waiting that followed the Ascension this mysterious prophecy of an approaching Baptism of the Spirit must have been much in the thoughts and prayers of the Eleven and their company. They could not form any conception of the manner in which the promise would fulfil itself in their experience. We can overhear their questionings as they discussed the Lord's words: What was this that he said to us? ... we cannot tell what he said. But the historian is not concerned with their anticipations, and the only reference to the Spirit between the Ascension and the Pentecost occurs in St Peter's speech upon the election of a new Apostle in the room of Judas. The Apostle finds the fate of Judas foreshadowed in Pss. lxix. 23 ff., cix. 8; the traitor's end was a necessary fulfilment of those passages: there must needs have been fulfilled the scripture which the Holy Spirit spoke beforehand by the mouth¹ of David concerning Judas. In this view of the functions of prophecy there is nothing new; it was common to devout Jews of St Peter's time. But it is new to find one of the Eleven interpreting the Psalms as prophetic of events in the life of Jesus; that he could do so even before the coming of the Spirit seems to be due to the impression left upon his mind by the teaching of the risen Lord. In the sequel we shall see to what purpose the same Apostle uses this new key to the understanding of the Psalms and the Prophets when the Spirit of Christ has opened his mind yet further to see the ultimate purpose of Old Testament prophecy.

3. At length, not many days after the Ascension, yet doubtless after an interval which seemed long to the waiting Church, the Spirit came and baptized the Apostles and their company. St Luke connects the event with the Day of Pentecost, the festival of the wheat-harvest which fell on the fiftieth day after the waving of the Paschal barley sheaf. But there is an ambiguity in his words which leaves the reader in doubt whether it occurred on the day itself or just before the day. St Luke's phrase ἐν τῇ συνπληροῦσθαι τὴν ἡμέραν τῆς πεντηκοστῆς means, as the margin of the English R.V. says, when the day of

Part I. v. Pentecost was being fulfilled; but it is a question of interpretation whether this signifies 'while the day was in progress,' or 'when it was close at hand' or 'had almost come¹.' Whichever view may be accepted, the coming of the Spirit is associated with the harvest festival of the Jewish year, when the firstfruits of the earth were offered, and men gave thanks for the ingathering. It is easy to see the appropriateness of such a day for the coming of the Divine Gift which is the firstfruits of the spiritual harvest. Among the later Jews the Pentecost was kept as the anniversary of the giving of the Law², and it has been pointed out that the Holy Spirit came to write on men's hearts the perfect law of liberty, the law of the Spirit of life. The New Testament, however, does not encourage the belief that the selection of the Pentecost was due to either of these associations, and it is more than doubtful whether the second was in vogue within the Apostolic age. One reason for the choice of the day, however, appears from the history itself. The Pentecost was the next great festival after the Passover, and it

¹ Lc. ix. 51 ἐν τῷ συμπληροῦσθαι τὰς ἡμέρας τῆς ἀναλήψεως αὐτοῦ is perhaps in favour of (1): the days of (to) the assumption are regarded as a period approaching completion. Compare also Acts xxi. 27 ἐμελλον οἱ ἑπτὰ ἡμέραι συντελεῖσθαι. The D text removes the ambiguity by the singular paraphrase ἐγένετο ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις ἐκείναις τοῦ συμπλ. τὴν ἡμέραν τῆς πεντ. was only on great festivals that a concourse of worshippers from the Dispersion could be expected to assemble at Jerusalem. If the coming of the Spirit was to be made known through the Jewish world, the Pentecost offered the next opportunity. It is interesting to remember that the Pentecost fell on the same day of the week as the day of the Passover-sheaf, i.e. Nisan 16. Thus if the Crucifixion took place on Nisan 14, as St John seems to imply, and that day was a Friday, the Pentecost as well as the Resurrection fell upon the first day of the week, and Sunday commemorates both the Lord's victory over death and the Spirit's entrance upon its work of giving life. The weekly Lord's Day is also the day of the Spirit of Christ.

The believers in Jerusalem—a few days before the Pentecost they were about a hundred and twenty, but the number may have been swelled by pilgrims from Galilee as the festival drew on—were all together in the same place on the day of the Spirit's coming. The hour was before 9 a.m. Was the place the Court of the Women in the Temple precinct? Or was it the large upper room where they had met day by day during the interval of waiting, and which had probably been the scene of the Last Supper? There is something to be said in favour of the Temple, i.e. either the court, or one of the chambers which opened into it¹. On the other hand Christian tradition from the fourth century has

Part I. v. regarded the Cenaculum as the place of the Descent¹, and this tradition is recommended by other considerations as well as by its antiquity. Not to press the fitness of a coincidence which brings the Paraclete to the Apostles on the very spot where they had received the promise of His coming, and where they had first seen the Risen Christ, it is distinctly more probable that the illapse occurred while they were assembled in a private house than in a room attached to the most public place of resort in Jerusalem, with the crowds close at hand which were already pouring into the Temple enclosure to celebrate the Feast. No event of the seven weeks which ended on the day of Pentecost seems more clearly to demand closed doors and the privacy of the 'upper room.'

While the brethren were assembled, and perhaps engaged in their morning act of common prayer², there came suddenly from heaven a loud sound³ as of the rushing of⁴ a mighty⁵ wind. The great gale seemed to enter and fill the chamber, and not simply to pursue its course without. The Spirit "was not in the wind," as it was not in the dove of the Baptism; but the wind represented the strength of the Divine Breath which had come to fill first the House of God, and then to sweep over the face of the earth with life-giving power, as in the beginning when it was borne over the waters of the chaos. The roar of the wind appealed to the ear, but it was accompanied or immediately followed by an appeal to the eye. There appeared to them tongues parting asunder (διαμεριζόμεναι) as of fire, and the fire sat on each one of them. The idea presented is that of great jets of flame breaking up into smaller scintillations, one of which rested upon the head of each of the assembled brethren. The whole was a vision, as St Luke is careful to explain¹, but a vision that corresponded to a great spiritual fact which at the same moment accomplished itself in the experience of all who were present. If, as St Matthew relates, the Baptist had said that the Christ should baptize in Holy Spirit and fire, his words would at once be recalled by those who had been his disciples. But apart from the Baptist's saying the tongues of fire would readily be understood to proclaim the Presence of God, awakening memories of such Old Testament incidents as the Burning Bush, the consumption of the sacrifice on Mount Carmel, the revelation to Elijah in the cave on Horeb,

 Ezek. i. 4. there was a new feature in the fire of Pentecost, for which the Old Testament had no precedent, the distribution of the tongues of flame, and the settling of one of them on each individual in the assembly².
 The distribution of the sacred fire evidently pointed to the truth that the Paraclete had come to dwell not only with the society as a whole, nor only with the officers of the society, but with all its members.
 As for the tongue-like form of the flames, events led to their being interpreted as emblems of new powers of utterance bestowed upon believers by the Spirit of Christ. *They were all filled with Holy Spirit³, and began to speak with other (ἑτέραις) tongues⁴, natural meaning of the words, to escape from the conclusion that the historian represents the gift as meeting the needs of a polyglott multitude. But to what extent was the multitude polyglott? Could not every one in the crowd, whether Jew or proselyte, have understood either a dialect of Aramaic or the colloquial Greek which was spoken everywhere in the basin of the Mediterranean¹? Are we to understand that the newly baptized brotherhood found themselves able with quickened powers of utterance to use either Aramaic or Greek, so that they could reach the whole of the pilgrims both from East and West? In what language was St Peter's long speech delivered, or was it delivered first in one language, and then in another? It is clear that the difficulties of the narrative are not altogether removed by supposing, as the Christian student has the right to suppose, that a unique miracle was wrought to signalize the coming of the Paraclete. To regard the gift of tongues, as many of the Fathers of the Church did, as having answered the wider purpose of qualifying the Apostles and other early missionaries for their work of evangelizing the world is scarcely possible. It is one of the clearest signs of a Divine preparation of the world for the Gospel that the command to preach it everywhere came at a time when one language gave access to almost every nation in the Roman world. The various peoples to whom the missionaries of the Cross were sent were scarcely more polyglott than the crowds present

Part I. v. at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost, nor is there any evidence that the gift of tongues, so far as it continued in exercise, was actually used for the purpose of preaching to the heathen. Thus the purpose of the miracle, if it is to be regarded in that light, was not to lighten the labour of the Christian missionary, but to call attention at the first outset to the advent of the Paraclete, to demonstrate the reality of the heavenly gift, and to symbolize the vanishing of racial distinctions before the progress of a catholic Church. Whatever may be the true explanation of the Pentecostal gift of tongues regarded as a historical fact, its spiritual significance is best understood when it is placed in the light of such considerations as these.

Acts ii. 5 ff. 4. At the sound of the roaring wind¹, the crowd gathered quickly round the brethren who meantime seem to have entered the Temple Court. When they heard themselves addressed in their several tongues by these men of Galilee their first feeling was one of perplexed amazement, which in some of the baser sort presently gave place to ribaldry: they are filled, some shouted, *with sweet wine*². While to the devout the utterances of the brethren were revelations of the mighty works of God, those who had no spiritual capacity heard nothing but the confused noise which might come from half-intoxicated revelers. St Peter, ever ready to act, and now prompted by the Spirit, accepted the challenge and poured out a flood of inspired eloquence. 'There was another explanation to be given of the miracle they had witnessed, and it could be found in the book of the prophet Joel. The last days foreseen by the prophet had come at last, the gift of the Spirit was no longer limited to a few chosen servants of God; henceforth it was for all the Lord's people, for young and old, for women as well as for men, for the servant as well as for the master. Your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions; and also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit. So Joel had foretold, and that day they had witnessed the beginning of this great effusion of spiritual power and life, the dawn of the great and glorious¹ day of the Lord when all who called on the name of the God of Israel should be saved.'

Neither the Prophet nor the Apostle who quoted him could have seen all that was implied in this prophecy, or how it would work itself out in the history of the Church. In the thought of both, all flesh seems to have borne the narrow sense 'all Israelites and all proselytes to the religion of Israel from among the Gentiles.' Yet the Apostle can already see further than the pre-Christian prophet;

Part I. v. 'afterwards' becomes in his interpretation *in the last days*¹, and by these he understands the Messianic age, which he recognizes as already begun. The discourse of St Peter, as reported by St Luke², is a witness to the reality of the spiritual crisis through which the speaker had passed. It is evident that if it truly represents the substance of what St Peter said, as there is good reason to suppose that it does, the Apostle had 'received power' from some new source. The Peter of the Day of Pentecost is a new man, far other than the Peter of the Passover; his words shew not only the freedom of speech (παρησία) which was characteristic of this Apostle, but a blending of courage, wisdom, and skill which we do not associate with him as he appears in the Gospels, and an insight into the work of the Messiah and the nature of His Kingdom such as even to the last day of the Lord's stay upon earth was certainly beyond his reach³. And in courage and general understanding of the new situation Peter was not alone; the whole company of believers was filled with the same spirit; the rest of the Twelve stood up with him, identifying themselves with his words. From that day forward a new strength, which was not their own, marked all the sayings and deeds of the Apostolic Church. It is in this great change of mental and spiritual attitude rather than in the external signs of wind and fire or in strange powers of utterance that we recognize the supreme miracle of the day of Pentecost.

After his quotation from Joel, St Peter twice again refers to the coming of the Spirit, and each of these references increases our sense of his grasp of the significance of that great event. In the first place he boldly connects it with the Ascension of Jesus Christ. Having been by the right hand of God lifted up, and having received from the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, he poured forth¹ this which ye both see and hear. The visible and audible manifestations of Pentecost were the lowest links in a chain which reached from heaven to earth; the furthest streams of a river which was welling out from the Throne of God. They indicated the presence of the Spirit in the Church, but the presence of the Spirit was the fulfilment of a Divine promise that could not find its accomplishment until the Son of Man had been glorified. If this was in the Apostle's mind, whence could he have learnt it except from the last discourse of the Lord, which the Spirit of Christ brought back to his memory and enabled him for the first time to understand? He now saw that the Pentecostal outpouring was direct evidence that Jesus was with the Father; it was the ripe fruit of the Passion and the Resurrection

Actsii. 38f. But the Apostle goes further. All who heard him, Jews or proselytes, might themselves experience the power of the Spirit. Repent, and let each one of you be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ unto remission of your sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit; for to you is the promise and to your children¹, and to all who are afar, as many as the Lord our God shall call to himself². St Peter sees that to Israelites and proselytes the only conditions necessary for their participation in the Spirit are repentance and faith expressed by the receiving of baptism in the name of Jesus Christ. The baptized would in all cases obtain the promised gift. But his words must not be made to bear a meaning which could not as yet have been present to his mind. It is clear from the subsequent chapters of the Acts that years passed before he realized that baptism with its attendant gifts of remission and the Spirit could be given to the uncircumcised Gentile. The Pentecostal outpouring of the Spirit did not at once illuminate every corner of the understanding, or solve problems for which a solution could be gained by experience; but it had already thrown a

5. St Luke does not say that the three thousand who were baptized that day received the gift of the Spirit immediately, or that they spake with tongues as the original company of believers had done when the Spirit came to them. Yet his account of the life upon which they entered shews that they were at once animated by a new spirit which was a greater and more permanent manifestation of the Spirit of Christ.

The Pentecostal outpouring of the Holy Spirit was far more than a miraculous display of spiritual power, intended to arrest attention and invite enquiry into the new faith. It was the beginning of a new era: an advent of the Spirit, as the Incarnation was the advent of the Son. Not as though either the Son or the Spirit had been absent from the world before the Advent. Each coming was a new manifestation, and the beginning of a new mission. God sent forth his Son, and when the mission of the Son had been fulfilled, He sent forth the Spirit of his Son to take up the work under new conditions. The Pentecost inaugurated this second Divine Mission. But the mission was greater and more far-reaching than the wonders of the Pentecost might suggest. The Spirit was to find a still more excellent way of revealing His presence and power than by the rushing wind and self-distributing tongues of fire, or the seeing of visions, the dreaming of dreams, the gift of tongues and

THE Day of Pentecost was the beginning of a Divine economy which is to continue to the end of the present age. The Paraclete had come to stay. While the tokens of His coming, the wind and fire, were momentary, and certain of His gifts ceased or were suspended after a few generations, His own presence in the Christian brotherhood was, from the Pentecost, permanent and assured. Yet the manifestations of the Spirit were variable, and have varied in fact, according to the requirements of periods, Churches, and individuals. In the Acts we learn how the Spirit revealed itself in the experience of the Apostolic age. The Book falls into two nearly equal parts, of which the first shews us the Paraclete at work in the Churches of Palestine, while the second relates the extension of His mission to the Gentiles.

1. The Apostles in the power of the Spirit rose at once to their new duties. They shewed themselves capable of teaching and ruling the Church, and representing their Master in the face of the world. They instructed the newly baptized, wrought signs and wonders in Jerusalem, proclaimed the Resurrection of Jesus and the hope which it held forth to mankind; through their preaching multitudes of men and women were added to the Church; even among the Jewish priesthood the faith gained a crowd of adherents¹. We cannot err in attributing

But, in truth, their boldness was not due so much to their having been long in the company of Jesus, as to His presence in them by the Spirit. Peter, as St Luke explains,
- Acts iv. 8. was filled with Holy Spirit ; the Lord was fulfilling to him the promise to His disciples that when they stood before rulers and kings for His company, as they prayed for strength to persist in their witness to Jesus Christ, the place in which they were gathered together was shaken, and they were all filled with the Holy Spirit and continued to speak the word of God with boldness. As the wind and fire had assured them of the original coming of the Paraclete, so the earthquake¹ spoke of His continued presence in their midst, under new and threatening conditions, and of His irresistible might. The Sanhedrin itself was powerless in the grip of the spiritual force which had begun to shake heaven and earth.

For the presence and power of the Spirit were felt not by the Apostles only, but by the whole Church. Reference has been made to the new life which filled the Christian Society even in the days that immediately followed the Pentecost. The sudden addition of three thousand members to the little community might easily have overtaxed its strength. The peace of the young Church might have been at once imperilled by the conflict of interests certain to arise in so large a clientèle of untaught members; many who joined it in the excitement of Pentecost might have been expected to fall away when they realized the demands which their new faith made upon them. But none of these things happened; on the contrary the newly baptized persevered in the teaching of the Apostles and the

Part I. vi. fellowship of the body, *in the Breaking of the Bread and the Prayers*¹; they readily accepted the discipline of the Christian life. Believers were known in those early days for their joyous, single-hearted piety, Acts ii. 46f. and earned the good will of the whole population. The brotherhood was marked by a unity of purpose such that it seemed to be moved by a common life, Acts iv. 32. and to have one heart and one soul.

2. This early manifestation of the Spirit provoked after a time a counter-manifestation of evil. The first outbreak of evil in the Church of Jerusalem arose out of an excess of zeal which in itself was good. From the first this Church had lived a common life, whether because it was fired by the example of the Essenes, or (as is more probable) in imitation of the first disciples of the Lord during the days of the Ministry. It would seem as if with the fresh illapse of spiritual power recorded in Acts iv. 31, the first enthusiasm for this life revived, and believers who still owned property in lands or houses began to strip themselves of it and devote the proceeds to the good of the community. Among Acts iv. 32 ff. those who did so was one Joseph, a Hellenistic Levite from Cyprus, to whom the Apostles, following the example of the Master, had given the descriptive surname Barnabas, interpreted by St Luke as *Son of Paraclesis*². The act of Joseph Barnabas was the simple outcome of the inner life of the spirit of unselfish love. But there were some whose motives were less pure, and two of the converts, a man and his wife, agreed upon a plan which seemed to promise them a high place in the esteem of their fellow-believers without a corresponding sacrifice. The man presented part of the price of the land which he had sold as if it had been the whole, and his wife, when questioned, told the same tale. This insincerity, worthy of the Pharisaic 'hypocrites,' met with a punishment that once for all vindicated in the eyes of the Church the awfulness of the gift which it had received. Ananias had suffered Satan to fill a heart which ought to have been full of the Spirit of God. He and his wife had, at the suggestion of the evil spirit, attempted to *deceive the Holy Spirit, to lie not to men, to Peter and John or to the whole brotherhood, but to God*¹. They had dared to tempt the Spirit of the Lord, to put to the trial His power to detect and to punish. It was a sin unto death, although it may be hoped that the loss of temporal life did not in this instance carry with it the infinite penalty of the second death. But in any case the impression produced was great and salutary: great fear came upon the whole Church and upon all that heard these things. It was felt on all hands that if the coming of the Spirit had transfigured and in a sense deified human life, it had also invested it

3. A second trouble, which arose within the Church perhaps shortly afterwards, ended more happily. The internal peace of the Church, hitherto unbroken, was threatened by a feeling of jealousy on the part of the Hellenists towards their Aramaic-speaking brethren. Before a rupture could occur the Apostles intervened, and the matter which gave rise to complaint was placed in the hands of seven persons chosen by the whole body and appointed by the Twelve with prayer and laying on of hands. In selecting the Seven the Church was charged by the Apostles to see that they were not only men of approved life (μαρτυρουμένους), but full of spirit and wisdom. This provision is the more noteworthy because the duties of the Seven were not directly spiritual; it was their part to "serve tables," i.e. to provide for the daily meals of the needy members of the community, leaving the Apostles free for *the work of prayer and the service of the word*². Yet even in this lower office the Seven had need of a full measure of the wisdom which comes from the Spirit of God. It was realized that as Bezalel and Oholiab needed to be filled with the Spirit when they undertook the building of the Tabernacle, so even the more secular duties of the Christian worker called for His inspiration, especially when they had to do with the building of the Church.

None of the Seven seems to have so entirely and immediately answered to this requirement as did Stephen. He is described as full of faith and Holy Spirit, full of grace and power. When he spoke in the synagogue, men were powerless to withstand the wisdom and the spirit with which he spoke; when he was brought before the Sanhedrin, his face was as the face of angel. In the last scene he is still full of Holy Spirit as in the first; gazing into heaven in a spiritual ecstasy he saw God's glory, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God; his dying prayers are echoes of the prayers of the Lord upon the cross. Nowhere in the history of the Apostolic Church is there a more suggestive picture of the character which is inspired by the Spirit of Christ—a character at once strong and tender, forceful and spiritual. Towards the end of his defence Stephen spoke with a severity which perhaps exceeded the bounds of prudence: Stiffnecked and uncircumcised in hearts and ears, you always resist the Holy Spirit; as your fathers did, so do you. It is scarcely surprising that they would hear no more. But with the uncompromising sternness of the Hebrew prophets

At Samaria as at Jerusalem the Spirit's coming was attested by signs which could not be misunderstood. Even Simon the sorcerer saw that through laying on of the Apostles' hands the Spirit was being given. But his unspiritual mind misinterpreted the fact. He supposed that these two men who had come from Jerusalem possessed a magical power unknown to himself, and he made overtures to them to sell him their secret. But the laying on of hands and the prayer which accompanied it possessed no magical efficacy which could be bought or sold. Thy silver go with thee to destruction, is the white-hot answer of Peter, because thou thoughtest to purchase for thyself with money that which is the gift of God. Yet if the Apostolic laying on of hands was a merely symbolical act which possessed no magical

Whether it had been employed from the day of Pentecost itself, or whether it had its beginning with the new departure by which the work of the Church was extended to Samaria, there is no evidence to shew. We know only that it was

It is a natural if not a necessary inference that the Laying on of Hands became the ordinary complement of Baptism both in the Jewish and the Gentile churches of the Apostolic age, and was the means of imparting to the baptized certain spiritual gifts over and above the new birth by which they passed at their baptism into the life of faith.

To return to Philip. As the book proceeds, he is more than once associated with the operations of the Holy Spirit. After his return to Jerusalem an angel directs him to go southwards along the road to Gaza. It is desert, the historian says; and whether he means the city or the road to it¹, the words suggest that the purpose of the mission was not easy to grasp. But Philip obeyed, and presently a chariot was heard approaching from behind. At once a voice within him which he recognized as the voice of the Spirit bade him join the chariot. He went, and the result was the conversion and baptism of the Ethiopian Eunuch. In Philip's interview with the Eunuch we observe the same skill in interpreting the Old Testament which marked the Apostles after the coming of the Spirit. The passage which the Eunuch was reading happened to be Isaiah liii., and Philip without hesitation beginning from this scripture proclaimed to him the gospel of Jesus. It may be that the Christian interpretation of this prophecy was already familiar to Philip, for our Lord had applied the passage to Himself; but it is not quoted elsewhere in the Acts, and the meaning of Isa. liii. may have been suggested by the same Spirit that had bidden Philip to join the Eunuch. As soon as the Eunuch had received baptism Philip found himself under the control of the Holy Spirit carried to Azotus, the Ashdod of the Old Testament, and thence northward through Philistia and the Sharon, till he reached the great Hellenistic city, Caesarea by the sea. The historian represents this sudden change of route as a rapture: *the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, and the Eunuch saw him no more*¹. Like much else in the Acts that relates to and emanates from the Palestinian Church, the language is cast in an Old Testament mould. The Spirit of Jahvch, Obadiah said to Elijah, shall carry thee whither I know not; and when at length Elijah went up by a whirlwind, the

The 'rapture' could scarcely have been a mere ecstasy¹; for the next verse shews us Philip arrived at Azotus and pressing on from thence to new scenes of work.

 Eph. iv. 11.

At Caesarea Philip seems to have taken up his abode. His work of 'serving tables' at Jerusalem may have come to an end with the dispersion of the Church, and events had shewn that he possessed the special gifts of a Christian teacher. A great field lay before him in the half-heathen city which was the seat of the Roman Procurator and the centre in Southern Palestine of Greek culture. Here Jews and Greeks were mingled in proportions scarcely to be found elsewhere in Palestine²; and Philip, if he was a Hellenist, as is probable, was well suited to do evangelistic work both among the Jews of the city and their proselytes. Our interest in Philip's Caesarean residence lies in a fact which comes to light in the second half of the Acts. Part I. vi.

 Twenty years or more after his arrival at Caesarea his house in that city was for some days the resting-place of St Paul on the last journey of the Apostle to Jerusalem¹. Philip by this time had four daughters, Acts xxi. 9.
 who followed the single life (παρθένοι)², and were prophetesses. The Spirit of the Lord rested on the children as it had rested on the father, but after a different manner; to him was given the work of an evangelist, to them the gift of prophecy. Already in this Christian household at Caesarea it was shewn that the same Spirit distributes His gifts to every member of Christ severally as He wills. Cf. 1 Cor. xii. 4, 11.

5. With the conversion of St Paul we are not directly concerned, for it was effected not by the Spirit of Christ but by the Lord in person. But the work of the Spirit finds a place in the sequel. Three days after the vision Ananias was sent to lay Acts ix. 17 f.
 his hands on Saul, that he might recover sight, and be filled with Holy Spirit. Thereupon there fell at once from Saul's eyes as it were scales, and he recovered sight, and arose and was baptized. Here the laying on of hands precedes baptism, and is given by a disciple who, so far as we know, held no office in the Church, but was specially commissioned by the Lord and thus for the moment possessed a Part I. vi. quasi-Apostolic authority¹. In the case of Saul, again, it is not clear whether the gift of the Spirit preceded, accompanied, or followed baptism; nor is it necessary to distinguish the stages of an illumination which was practically a single act. It is important, however, to observe that even in his unique experience the visible signs of the invisible Gift are not superseded. He who had 'seen the Lord,' and been changed by the sight, needed nevertheless the ministry of the disciple; he must receive baptism and the laying on of hands like any other convert who had been brought to the faith by the preaching of an Evangelist or an Apostle.

6. By this time every part of Palestine had its Christian congregations; and the chapter which describes the conversion of the Apostle of the Gen-Acts ix. 31. tiles contains a glowing account of the Palestinian Church as a whole. The church throughout all Judaea and Galilee and Samaria had peace, being edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord and in the comfort of the Holy Spirit was multiplied. So the Revised Version translates Acts ix. 31, but there is some ambiguity in the Greek. Dr Hort would render the second part of the verse, "and walking by the fear of the Lord and by the invocation of the Holy Spirit (probably the invoking His guidance as Paraclete to the Ecclesia) was multiplied," while others would punctuate the sentence differently: being edified and walking in the fear of the Lord; and by the comfort of the Holy Spirit was multiplied. Part I. vi.

The vital question is as to the meaning of παράκλησις τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος. Coming to the Acts from the reading of the Fourth Gospel, we are tempted to connect it with Παράκλητος; but it may be doubted whether that title of the Holy Spirit was known to St Luke. It seems still more precarious to give to παράκλησις here only in the N.T. the sense of ἐπίκλησις, 'invocation.' 'Exhortation' it can scarcely mean here, but 'encouragement,' 'comfort', suits the context well; of this the harassed Church had need, and this the Holy Spirit, now that outward peace was restored, and His voice could again be heard, was able to impart. Fear of God and comfort of the Spirit characterized the religious life of the Church in those early days—the fear of the Old Testament tempered by the freedom and joy of the New. No real antinomy was felt to exist between the two: the sense of awe that guards the Christian life from sin, and the sense of peace and gladness that comes from the Spirit of Christ, are complementary and not mutually exclusive principles.

7 A new and far wider field was opened by the

of joyful welcome than of invocation; the cry Veni, Creator Spiritus belongs to a later age, when the Spirit was sought and perhaps expected, but not regarded as a Guest Who had already come, and come to abide.

- Part I. vi. baptism of Cornelius and his friends at Caesarea. If Philip was in that city at the time, it is significant that Peter was summoned from Joppa. The crisis was such as to demand the presence of an Apostle and the leader of the Apostolic College; for upon the decision which was to be taken the future of the Church depended. The keys of the Kingdom had been committed to St Peter, and it now fell to his lot to determine whether the doors of the Kingdom should be thrown open to the uncircumcised Gentile or shut against him. But the question was in fact answered
- Acts x. 19. for him by the Holy Spirit. It was the Spirit who in the first instance bade him go with the messengers of Cornelius: go with them, nothing doubting, for I have sent them. When he arrived and delivered his message, it was the Spirit who determined his course of action by falling on all the uncircumcised and as yet unbaptized hearers. As the Lord Jesus had been anointed with Holy Spirit and with power, as the ascended Christ had baptized the circumcised believers at Jerusalem with the Spirit on the day of Pentecost, so now He sent the same Spirit on this company of Gentiles; while Peter yet spoke...the Holy Spirit fell on them as on Peter himself and the rest at the beginning. Could any doubt remain that these men who had been baptized with the Spirit might be baptized with water in the name of the Lord? If God gave them the like gift as He did unto Jewish believers, who was Peter or any human minister that he could withstand God? A second Pentecost had proclaimed the admissibility of Gentiles to Christian baptism¹, and thus laid the foundation of a Catholic Church. Part I. vi.

8. While all believers, whether Jews or Gentiles, received the Spirit, some received Him as the Spirit of prophecy and 'prophesied,' or became 'prophets.' Such were Judas and Silas and Agabus, and others whose names are not given. At first, as might have been expected, Jerusalem was the centre of prophetic activity, from which prophets, singly or in bands, went forth to visit other churches, as occasion arose. But the gift of prophecy was not limited to the mother Church; prophets are found ministering in the Church at Antioch and afterwards at Tyre and Caesarea, and, as we shall see, the order flourished also in the Pauline Churches. Acts xi. 28,
xv. 32.

The gift of tongues, which on the Day of Pentecost was the characteristic possession of those who had received the Spirit, seems to have fallen into disuse in the Palestinian churches² as the years went on and prophecy took its place. Of all the 'spiritual gifts' prophecy was the noblest and the most enduring, and for Jewish Christians it had the advantage of appearing in the light of a revival of Acts xiii. 1.

² At least it is mentioned in this connexion only in Acts x. 46, on occasion of the 'second Pentecost' of the Gentile Church. On the other hand prophecy, though not named in Acts ii. except in the quotation from Joel, appears in Acts xi. 27, xiii. 1, xv. 32, xxi. 9 f.

9. One more reference to the Spirit in the early history of the Church of Jerusalem may be noticed here. The conference of Apostles and local Elders, held at Jerusalem to consider the position of the new Gentile Churches, felt itself at liberty to claim the presence of the Holy Spirit as Assessor. The decree which gives the decision of the conference begins, It seemed good to the Holy Spirit and to us. The Paraclete who was with believers individually was assuredly also with the Church in her corporate capacity. This claim must not be taken as one of infallibility or finality—some of the defects of the decree were afterwards modified or abandoned—but rather as a recognition of the fulfilment of the Lord's promise that the other Advocate should abide with them; that where two or three were met together in His name, there He by His Spirit would be in the midst of them. At the end of the letter of the conference the 'Western' text of the Acts adds words¹ which extend the Divine Presence to the non-official members of the new Churches: Fare ye well, borne on your course in the Holy Spirit. This has been condemned as a Montanist gloss, but it does not exceed the sober truth as it revealed itself to the Apostolic age. There is an inspiration which belongs to all believers in virtue of the indwelling of the Spirit in the whole Body of Christ.

1. THE dispersion of the Jerusalem Church which followed the death of Stephen carried some of its Greek-speaking members as far as Antioch in Syria. A proselyte from Antioch had been among the Seven, and now through the labours of these scattered disciples a congregation of Christian Hellenists arose on the banks of the Orontes. When the tidings of this new beginning reached the mother Church Barnabas was sent down, as Peter and John had been sent to Samaria, and this 'son of Paraclesis,' being a good man and full of Holy Spirit and faith, strengthened and developed the new church, which grew so rapidly that it attracted the notice of the Greek citizens of Antioch, and their ready wit found for its members the nickname of 'Christians'.¹ Before long the Church at Antioch was second only to the Jerusalem Church in importance and perhaps in numbers, and it was what the

It was in the Church of Antioch that the movement began for evangelizing the Greek lands to the West. In the spring of A.D. 47¹, a solemn 'liturgy'² with fasting was being conducted in the congregation at Antioch by a group of prophets and teachers, men recognized as possessing special gifts of the Holy Spirit, among whom were Barnabas and Saul. It may have been that they were seeking light as to the next step which was to be taken. As the liturgy proceeded, the Spirit spoke by one of the prophets, perhaps Simeon Niger or Lucius of Cyrene or Manaen, Separate me³ Barnabas and Saul for the work to which I have called them. The voice was the voice of a prophet, but all knew that it was the Spirit that had spoken, and hastened to fulfil the command. There was a further service of fasting and prayer, and then the two were 'separated⁴,' i.e. consecrated to the service of the Holy Spirit by the laying on of the hands of the other prophets and teachers, and so dismissed. But it was felt that they had received their mission not from the Church, but directly from its Divine Guide; they were sent out by the Holy Spirit.

Thus the missions of the Church to heathen lands were set on foot by an act of the Spirit. As His illapse upon Cornelius and his party had affirmed the principle of admitting Gentiles to the Church, so His voice by the mouth of the Antiochian prophets sent the still hesitating Hellenistic teachers to the heathen West. From Antioch the way lay open to Asia Minor, and from Asia Minor to Europe and the whole basin of the Mediterranean. On the day when Barnabas and Saul went down to Seleucia to set sail for Cyprus¹, the evangelization of the Roman Empire began; and it began under the guidance of the Spirit of Christ.

¹ It does not appear that the missionaries were directed to Seleucia and thence to Cyprus by the Holy Spirit. Early associations would lead Barnabas thither (Acts iv. 36); besides, Cyprus was the natural stepping-stone between Syria and the West.

tinually filled (ἐπληροῦντο) with joy and Holy Spirit.

Part I.

The occasion was one for depression, for persecution had begun, and the missionaries had left. But joy and spiritual exultation, it is evident from the letters of St Paul, were normal effects of the Spirit's presence, and independent of external circumstances; indeed they might be heightened by pressure from without. So it proved at Pisidian Antioch, and the same general results followed wherever the missionaries went; the same feature of primitive Christian life repeated itself in every city where the Church was planted.

3. Further, the Spirit by whom St Paul was sent forth at the first is seen afterwards controlling and directing his way. This is specially clear in the course of events by which he was led to pass from Asia Minor to Europe. It is unnecessary to enter here into the geographical puzzle connected with Acts xvi. 6, 7. Whatever may be intended by the Phrygian and Galatic region (τὴν Φρυγίαν καὶ Γαλατικὴν χώραν), it is evident that at a certain point in their second journey the missionaries resolved to carry their work to the western sea-coast, but before they could fulfil their purpose they were prohibited by a Divine Voice within them or in the mouth of a prophet: they were *forbidden by the Holy Spirit to preach the word in Asia*¹. Nothing could have been more natural than the desire to advance from Phrygia to the coast; a great road called them thither, and such a centre of life as Ephesus offered an unrivalled field for the preaching of the Gospel. But they were checked by a force which was not merely distinguishable from their own will, but opposed to it. The same thing happened at a further stage in their journey. When, unable to go westward, they turned to the North with the intention of entering Bithynia, the Spirit of Jesus suffered them not. Neither Asia nor Bithynia was to be evangelized on the present occasion: some other call was more urgent. It is remarkable that in both cases the guidance was negative only, keeping the missionaries from a false move but not pointing out whither they should go. The actual step forward was determined by circumstances or, as in the latter instance, by a dream. It was no part of the Spirit's work to supersede the reason or the judgement; but rather to leave them free to work upon the facts. In this method of procedure by the Spirit of Jesus we have the counterpart of the method of Jesus Himself, whose teaching usually indicated the direction in which His disciples should go without dictating a definite line of conduct.

Acts xvi.

4. When at length St Paul found himself at liberty to begin work at Ephesus, one of his earliest experiences proved the reality of the Pentecostal gift. Apollos who had been there before him and taught the things concerning Jesus, knew only the baptism of John, and though a fervent believer had not received the baptism of the Spirit. Apollos was now at Corinth, but the Apostle found at Ephesus a band of disciples who, if they had not been under the instruction of the Alexandrian teacher, occupied nearly the same position. Observing in these men no signs of the Spirit's working, he asked whether they had received the Spirit when they came to faith (πιστεύσαντες). Their answer was a frank confession that they had not even heard of any gift of the Spirit (ἀλλ' οὐδ' εἰ πνεῦμα ἅγιόν ἐστιν ἠκούσαμεν). Upon this they were instructed and baptized into Christ. The Apostle then laid his hands on them, as Peter and John on the Samaritans, and with the same result; the Holy Spirit came upon them with signs following; they both spoke with tongues and prophesied.

It would be precarious to gather that St Paul everywhere as a matter of course laid his hands on the baptized. The case of these twelve disciples of the Baptist was exceptional, and this solemn confirmation of their baptism may have been exceptional likewise. Nevertheless, since St Paul did not usually baptize his converts but left the ministry of baptism in the hands of those to whom it belonged, probably his companions in travel, it is not improbable that it was his practice to follow up the washing of regeneration with the imposition of his own hands on all occasions when this was possible. It is at least significant that we find him following the example of the older Apostles in the use of so characteristic a rite, and with the same consequences. The facts create a presumption that the laying on of hands after baptism by an Apostle was a recognized custom of the whole Church and one which it had pleased God to honour with special gifts of the Spirit of Christ.

5. The men on whom St Paul laid his hands at Ephesus 'prophesied.' Prophecy was held in high honour by St Paul, and the Christian Prophets are placed by him in the second rank of the charismatic ministry, the Apostles only taking precedence of them. In the Pauline churches the prophet counted for more than the pastor or teacher; he was the mouthpiece of the Spirit; as the Holy Spirit in the old time had spoken to Israel by the mouth of David or Isaiah², so now He spoke by these men in Gentile cities and in the midst of congregations largely composed of Gentile converts. The coming of the Spirit had restored to the Church the gift of prophecy, and the prophets, in whom it was manifested, took rank in the Church above the local bishops and deacons to whom were committed the lower gifts of government and service.

6. Yet the local ministries were not undervalued in the churches founded by St Paul, nor was their relation to the Spirit overlooked. Presbyters were appointed in every city where a Christian society had been planted, and were taught to regard themselves as having received their appointment from the Holy Spirit. The office was committed to them with prayer and the laying on of hands, perhaps preceded by an exercise of the prophetic gift. But beyond this, those who held it were assured that they possessed a charisma, a special gift which if not equal in dignity to that of the prophet, qualified them to fulfil their own special work in the Body of Christ. It was realized that the One Spirit of Jesus Christ supplied the needs of all the members of the Church, distributing to each one severally such a measure of grace as his office or his condition of life required.

How widely and in how many ways the Paraclete made His power felt in the Gentile Churches will be evident when we consider the teaching of the Pauline Epistles. But from the second part of the Acts alone it is clear that His Mission was no less world-wide than the destiny of the Christian Society. Contrary to the expectation of the Apostles, the Spirit was poured upon all the baptized without distinction. St Peter was on sure ground when he pressed this point upon the attention of the Apostles and Elders assembled at Jerusalem to consider the claims of the Gentile converts. God, who knows the heart, bore witness to them, giving them the Holy Spirit even as He did to us, and made no difference between us and them, cleansing their hearts by faith. This fact disposed finally of the attempt to convert the Church of God into a Jewish sect. It was the common possession by Jew and Gentile of the same Spirit which saved the principle of catholicity.

THE Synoptic recollections of our Lord's teaching upon the Holy Spirit are few, but perhaps as many as the scope of the first three Gospels might lead us to expect. It is even possible that they are fairly representative of His Galilean teaching on this subject, for the early Ministry was not the occasion or Galilee the place for a full revelation of the work of the Spirit in the new order which was to follow His Passion and Resurrection.

1. It is convenient to begin, as St Luke begins, with the announcement in the synagogue at Nazareth. Though the incident belongs to a later stage in the Ministry¹, the words spoken at Nazareth disclose the consciousness of a unique relation to the Spirit which is presupposed by all that Jesus taught about Him. Part II. i.

The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because the Lord hath anointed me to bring good tidings unto the meek. So begins the lesson which Jesus read out of the roll of the Book of Isaiah. The words have been taken by some interpreters of Isaiah as spoken by the prophet in reference to himself, while others regard them as put by him into the mouth of the Servant of the Lord. In either case their meaning was not exhausted by the experience of the past; to-day, the Lord proceeded, has this scripture been fulfilled in your ears. That day they had heard the voice of the true Christ of God. Lc. iv. 18

Lc. iv. 21.

The Christ takes His stand upon the words of the Old Testament. The Spirit by which He had been anointed was none other than the Spirit of the God of Israel, the Spirit that spake by the prophets of Israel. He accepts the character of the Lord's Anointed which had belonged to the prophets, the priests, and the kings of Israel. More than this, His description of His Messianic work is drawn upon the old lines; He has been anointed to

¹ See p. 56 f., where the facts are considered in connexion with the history of the Ministry.

Part II. i. proclaim a new Jubilee¹, an acceptable year of the Lord in which captives and prisoners shall be released and the poor shall come again into their own. But as the mission on which he is sent goes deeper into the heart of things than that of the Old Testament priest or prophet, so the anointing He has received is no mere formal appointment to an office, or even a special gift of prophetic power, but the flooding of His whole humanity with the light and power of the Divine Spirit. He is conscious of a plenitude of spiritual gifts which constitutes at last a fulfilment of the earlier hopes and experiences. The Messianic outpouring of the Spirit has begun in His person; He has received from the Father the unction which He will hereafter give to the Church. But for the present He does not actually call Himself the Christ; He claims only to have fulfilled the rôle of the Servant of the Lord. 'The Lord hath anointed me to bring good tidings' is a sufficient basis for the ministry of preaching and healing with which His work began.

26 f.

Mc. ii. 10. 2. Early in the ministry at Capernaum the Christ interpreted His mission to proclaim release to the captives as an authority to remit sins. But as time went on, while expanding His offer of remission in a general way, He had occasion to limit it in one direction. Whosoever shall blaspheme, He taught, against the Holy Spirit has no remission for ever, but is guilty of an eternal sin. 'All acts of sin shall be remitted to men on earth except one; for the man who has blasphemed the Holy Spirit there can be no remission either here or in the next age; such a man is in the grip of a sin from which there is no discharge.' The words are followed in St Mark by one of that Evangelist's rare notes of explanation: because they said, 'It is an unclean spirit that he has.' That some superhuman power wrought in Jesus was not to be denied in the face of His words and deeds. Rabbis who had come down from Jerusalem and had seen and heard for themselves could not resist the general belief that He worked by a power greater than that of man. But the question remained whether the power that inspired Him was good or evil, from above or from below, and they ventured to adopt the latter view and even to spread a report that He 'had Beelzebul,' i.e. was in collusion with the arch-demon. This was to characterize the Spirit by which He wrought as in the highest degree impure and diabolical, although it was clear that unclean spirits could not be cast out by one of themselves or by any power but the Holy Spirit of God. What these men had said and taught others to believe was therefore blasphemy of the most deadly kind, and, if deliberate, was past forgiveness. The man who was capable of calling good evil, of painting the Source of holiness in the colours of Hell, was beyond repentance and therefore beyond forgiveness; his sin must pass with him unremitted into the next aeon, to which the earthly mission of the Saviour did not extend.

Mc. iii. 29.

Part II. i

Mc. iii.

Mc. iii. 30.

Part II. i. The first and third Gospels contrast this blasphemy against the Spirit with blasphemy against the Son of Man: whosoever shall speak a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever shall speak against the Holy Spirit it shall not be forgiven him. There is reason for supposing that this form of the saying may be a doublet of the Marcan form¹. But the thought is dormant in St Mark; for if blasphemy against the Spirit is the sole exception to the sins which are within reach of forgiveness, blasphemy against Jesus which does not involve a conscious antagonism to His Spirit may be remitted. In any case the Marcan saying invests the work of the Holy Spirit with the inviolable sanctity that belongs to the Divine.

Lc. xi. 20.

3. In the course of the same conversation there is some direct teaching upon the subject of the casting out of unclean spirits. If I by the Spirit of God cast out the demons, then is the Kingdom of God come upon you. The presence of the Divine Spirit marks the advent of the Divine Kingdom, and its presence is known by the dispersion of the forces of evil. Our Lord here not only accepts the Old Testament doctrine of the Spirit of God but to some extent He seems to sanction the popular belief in the existence and activity of evil spirits. 'Demons' appear to enter into His scheme of the spiritual world, and their workings to be as real as those of the Spirit of God. Readers of the Gospel must of course be careful not to attribute to our Lord

allusions to Jewish ideas which may be due to the Evangelists or their sources, and such are perhaps the greater part of the Synoptic references to the 'demons'. Even when Jesus is represented as addressing an evil spirit in the act of expelling it², it may be argued that He accommodates Himself to the prevalent belief, or that He personifies a mental disease, as on one occasion He rebuked the rage of a storm upon the Lake³; or that His words have been coloured by the media through which they have reached us. But it is otherwise with the passage before us. The whole argument turns on the reality of the kingdom and forces of Satan; it recognizes the existence of spiritual powers working under a chief and working against the Kingdom of God. There was thus much of solid truth in the demonology of Babylon, Persia, and Greece, and in that of His Jewish contemporaries, and our Lord endorses this truth without setting the seal of His authority to the mythical forms in which it was expressed⁴. It is worthy of note, for example, that He seems tacitly to set aside the name 'Beelzebul'⁵ and to substitute the Old Testament term 'Satan,' even while He assumes the existence of such a Part II. i. being. Later Jewish developments are accepted only so far as they were legitimate inferences from the teaching of the Canon.

4. If the Spirit of God is the expeller of the evil forces which harass and defile human life, He is also the source in man of all spiritual good. This complementary view of the Spirit's work is the next to appear in the teaching of Jesus. He had been praying, and when He ceased, the Twelve asked to be taught to pray. The Lord's Prayer is given them, and a discourse on prayer follows. The Lord's Prayer begins with the recognition of the Fatherhood of God, and on this foundation the Lord builds an assurance of the efficacy of prayer. Who among you that is a father will give his son a snake for a fish, or a scorpion for an egg? If then ye, evil as ye are, know how to give your children gifts that are good, how much more shall the Father who is of heaven give Holy Spirit to those who ask him? The words occur also, but with a somewhat different context¹, in the Sermon on the Mount, where for Holy Spirit the first Gospel simply repeats good things from the protasis of the sentence. The simpler form is probably the earlier, and St Luke's *Holy Spirit*² will in that case be an interpretation in the light of the Pentecostal gift.

It should be added that in the Lucan recension of the Lord's Prayer, for Thy Kingdom come at reads, Thy Holy Spirit come and cleanse us (ἐλθάτω τὸ πνεῦμά σου τὸ ἅγιον καὶ καθαρισάτω ἡμᾶς)¹. This is clearly a gloss, and one which does not belong to the first age; but it expresses the great truth that the Kingdom of God as an inward power is identical with the working of the Spirit of God², and it is valuable as an ancient interpretation of the clause.

Part II. i. view of inspiration which was prevalent among the scribes. But He accepts the general principle that the Holy Spirit spoke by the prophets and psalmists, i.e. that their minds, as they prophesied, were raised above their natural level by a Divine gift.

With this acceptance of the inspiration of the Psalmist we may compare the Lord's promise of a like inspiration to His followers in certain circumstances connected with their future mission. When they lead you to judgement, delivering you over to the courts, be not anxious beforehand what ye shall speak, but whatever shall be given you in that hour, this speak ye; for ye are not the speakers, but the Holy Spirit speaks by you. This is not a general promise of inspiration, nor does it affirm the inspiration of the writers of the New Testament; it does not even predict the rise of an order of New Testament prophets. But it guarantees to Christian confessors, in the moment of need, the presence of an Advocate within who will speak by their mouth as truly as he spoke by the mouth of David or Isaiah. We have here the germ of the doctrine of the 'other Paraclete' or Advocate which is developed in the fourth Gospel. Though the advocacy here promised is limited to rare occasions if not to the first age, it represents the Spirit as fulfilling in the disciples after the departure of Jesus the office which Jesus Himself would have undertaken had He been still with them. This promise belongs to the apocalyptic discourse on the Mount of Olives which closely precedes the Passion (Mc.), for the position

Mc. xlii. 11
(cf. Mt. x.
xii. 11 f.).

which it holds in St Matthew and at its first appearance in St Luke can scarcely be original. Such a promise would naturally have been reserved for the eve of the Master's departure; in Galilee it would have been neither necessary nor indeed intelligible. Part II. i

6. Alone of the three Synoptists St Matthew has preserved the Lord's great commission to His Church, Go, disciple all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit. The words stand in all known MSS. and versions of the first Gospel, and from the second century at least¹ they have supplied the recognized form of Christian Baptism. Yet reasons have lately been produced² for hesitating to accept them as they are found in our present text. It has been urged that Eusebius frequently quotes the passage in the form Go make disciples of all the nations, either omitting all that follows or adding simply in my name. As in one place he expressly comments on the last three words, they must either have existed in some form of the text known to him, or have been strongly impressed on his own mind when he wrote. But that he was not acquainted with or did not accept the longer reading is put out of the question by the fact that he quotes it elsewhere as genuine. The evidence has been examined at length by the present Bishop of Ely³, and few who have read his

Mt. xxviii.

Part II. i. investigation will disagree with his finding that the whole evidence "establishes without a shadow of doubt or uncertainty the genuineness of Matt. xxviii. 19."

It is less easy to interpret this great text than to defend its genuineness. As to its purpose, it can scarcely have been meant or at first understood to prescribe a form of words for use in the ministration of Christian Baptism, although our familiarity with this employment of the words may tempt us to take this view. All the baptisms recorded in the Acts¹ seem to have been administered simply in the name of Jesus Christ, and the same practice is implied in the Epistles². We must look elsewhere for the original intention of the words.

The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit are named separately in our Lord's Synoptic teaching, and the Father and the Son or the Father and the Spirit are correlated in His more private or mystical instructions³. But until we reach this last command Jesus does not proceed to bring together into one category the Father, the Son, and the Spirit. To do this was to gather up the lines of all His earlier theological teaching; to crown all that He had taught concerning these Three Persons by presenting Them as at once a Triad and a Unity. But further—and here we begin to see the true purpose of His words—He associates this Divine Trinity with the life of each of His disciples and of His whole Ecclesia to the end of time, for every disciple is to be baptized into¹ the name of the Three. Into the name is a form of words which still needs further investigation, but part at least of its meaning can be grasped. Had the words run simply 'into the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit' they might have been interpreted as implying merely the incorporation of believers by Christ's Baptism into the fellowship of the Holy Trinity. But into the name seems to suggest the further thought of 'proprietaryship².' The baptized person is not only brought into union with the Three, but he is devoted to Their service, living thenceforth a consecrated life.

Whether this is in the words or not, they certainly carry the Synoptic doctrine of the Spirit far beyond the point hitherto reached. For the Spirit is now seen to be not merely God in action, but God in relation to God, and we approach a mystery which belongs to the Divine Life itself. Yet this great step is taken in the interests not of scientific but of practical theology. The very sentence in which the first glimpse is given of a mysterious threeness in the inner Life of God, turns our attention to the bearing of this revelation upon the life of Part II. i. man. We are permitted to see the essential unity of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit only in order that we may know ourselves to stand by virtue of our baptism into Christ in a vital relation to the Three. With the Father and the Son, the Holy Spirit claims our baptized life as His own. But what this means could be understood only when the Spirit had come; the Acts and Epistles are a running comment upon it. It is a life rather than a creed, a new relation to God rather than a new theology¹ that our Lord contemplates in the most theological, the most mystical of all His instructions.

Acts i. 4, 8.

7. St Luke represents our Lord as having in another of His last teachings foretold the Pentecostal outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Behold, I send forth the Promise of my Father upon you; but as for you, sit ye still in the city till ye have been clad with power from the height. The words are repeated in substance at the beginning of Acts. Both passages contain the remarkable phrase 'the Promise of the Father,' the Acts adding, which ye heard from me; and in both the context shews that the Promise is the Gift of the Holy Spirit to be poured out on the Church after the Ascension. The Promise of the Father has been interpreted as the outpouring of the Spirit promised to Israel through the prophets—such prophecies as are to be found in Isaiah and Ezekiel, in Joel and Zechariah; but the mention of 'the Father' points rather to a promise made by Jesus Himself, and this interpretation is confirmed by the added words in Acts. No such promise given by the Son in His Father's name can be found in the Synoptic Gospels¹, and we are driven to the conclusion that the reference is to the last discourse which is recorded only by St John. On the night before His Passion the Lord had said, I will pray the Father and he shall give you another Advocate: the Father will send him in my name: I will send him from the Father. All was then in the future, and, as it might have seemed, a future yet distant, certainly difficult to realize. But much had occurred since that discourse was spoken: the Passion, the Resurrection, the life of the forty days; it was now the eve of the Ascension; the Pentecost was near at hand. With the coming of the Spirit full in view, the future is changed into a present: 'behold, I am sending it forth²'; the mission of the Spirit is as good as begun; the fulfilment of the Promise is imminent and potentially come. The note of this great coming event is 'power': power clothing the Eleven, an illapse of spiritual energy which will invest them and transfigure their lives in the sight of the world. These 'babes³' of the Ministry will be the strong men of the new order to be initiated by the Pentecost. As the Christ went forth to His work in Galilee *in the power of the Spirit*⁴, so His disciples would know

THE Fourth Gospel is 'spiritual' in a sense deeper than that which Clement of Alexandria attached to the word¹. It deals more intimately than the Synoptic Gospels with the things of the Spirit, carrying its readers further into the inner life of man; and it yields fuller anticipations of the work of the Spirit of God in the Christian Church. How much the present form of the teaching owes to the inspired thought² or the personal ideals of the writer, or how much to his experience of post-Pentecostal times, it is not easy to determine. In this chapter and the next it will be assumed that the discourses attributed to our Lord are at least in substance His. To assign to the Evangelist more than the rôle of an interpreter is to over-estimate his genius or his inspiration, and to limit unduly the scope of Christ's mission as a Revealer of religious truth.

- Jo. iii. 1.—11. I. The first of the great series of discourses which is a chief feature of St John's Gospel is an instruction upon the work of the Spirit as the regenerative principle in human life. Our Lord is visited at night by a Pharisee whose position as a member of the Sanhedrin forbids him to come openly by day. Nicodemus has convinced himself that Jesus is a teacher come from God, since the signs that He works shew that God is with Him; and the teacher of Israel, the accredited Rabbi, places himself at the feet of the Teacher authorized by Heaven. Jesus at once accepts the position and begins His teaching. But the teaching was not such as Nicodemus could at once receive, nor is it easy for the reader, though he may recognize the truth of what is taught, to see its connexion with the circumstances. Yet the connexion if not obvious is real and deep. Nicodemus is conscious only of an intellectual want; he knows himself to be in need of further instruction, but has not realized that there is a prior need. Spiritual life is the first necessity for one who would be a disciple of the New Kingdom¹. And spiritual life must begin with spiritual birth. Unless one has been born from above² he cannot see the Kingdom of God. Without a Divine birth there is in man, as he now is, no capacity for discerning spiritual truth even if it is taught by a Teacher sent from God. When Nicodemus exclaims against the impossibility of a second birth, as he understands it—can a man enter into his mother's womb a second time, and so be born?—the Lord repeats His great saying with slight

Part II. ii. amplifications: unless one has been born of water and Spirit he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God. The birth from above is not of flesh¹ but of Spirit, and it admits not only to a sight of the Divine Kingdom but to a place in it.

Here, as in the other great Baptismal saying of Matt. xxviii. 19, the existing text has recently been attacked. It has been maintained² that the reference to water in v. 5, although it is now to be found in all mss. and versions, had no place in the Fourth Gospel as it came from the writer. Justin, it is said, could not have failed to quote John iii. 5 in the fuller form if he had read it so, for the mention of water would have suited his argument, in which he speaks of regeneration in Baptism; yet he is content to write "Unless ye have been born anew ye shall in no wise enter into the Kingdom of heaven." This inference is thought to receive some support from textual considerations. Wendt with more probability suggests³ that the mention of water is due to the Evangelist's presentation of the saying and had no place in its original form⁴; but in the absence of any evidence it is safer to adhere to the text which has documentary support.

⁴ As καὶ πνεύματι in Mt. iii. 11 is possibly due to St Matthew or to the Logia.

Yet though the reference to water must, in the present state of our knowledge, keep its place in verse 5, its omission in the true text of verse 8 shews that it is of secondary importance, the primary and essential source of the new birth being the Divine. Water¹ is the outward visible sign which attends the inward spiritual grace. The grace which is the real efficient is 'Spirit'—evidently the power of the Spirit of God, since the birth is "from above." The Spirit is the generative power in the sphere of the spiritual life. Spiritual life comes from the Spirit and not from the flesh; it does not descend from father to son in the way of natural generation, but is imparted to each individual by a spiritual birth. Part II. ii.

The Lord does not wait for any further question on the part of Nicodemus, but at once proceeds to work out His doctrine of the spiritual birth. Why is it necessary? Because 'flesh' and 'spirit' belong to different and indeed opposite categories, and the one cannot produce the other: flesh can only generate flesh; a spiritual nature, possessing spiritual capacities and born to a spiritual life, can only be generated by spirit. That which has been born of the flesh is flesh, and that which has been born of the Spirit is spirit. Wonder not that I said to thee, You² must be born from above. The strangeness of Jo. iii. 6 f.

¹ "As Nicodemus heard the words, water carried with it a reference to John's baptism" (Westcott). To the readers of the Gospel it would point to the 'washing of regeneration' (Tit. iii. 6), in which "the baptism of water was no longer separated from, but united with, the baptism of the spirit."

² Ὑμᾶς, i.e. τοὺς γεγεννημένους ἐκ τῆς σαρκός.

Part II. ii. this demand disappears when the law that like produces like is borne in mind. Human nature cannot rise above itself; to mount up to God and to things above men must receive a new principle of life from above, from God¹. Nor ought a difficulty to be found in the mysteriousness of a spiritual birth.

Jo. iii. 8. The spirit of the wind blows where it wills, and its voice thou hearest, but dost not know whence it comes and where it goes; so is every one who has been born of the Spirit of God. You cannot restrict the action of the Divine Breath, or prescribe its course, any more than you can dictate to the winds of heaven. That the wind is at work we know by the familiar sounds of breeze or gale, but its origin and its destination are hidden from us. Such is the manner of the Spirit's working in him who has been born from above; there is the same mystery surrounding it, the same ignorance on man's part of the laws by which it is governed, the same certainty that its existence and its presence are matters of fact, since its effects fall within our range of observation, even within the cognizance of the senses; the Spirit's voice is heard in human utterances and the Spirit's power felt in human actions, though the Spirit itself is inaudible and invisible.

Nicodemus is still unconvinced, How can these things come to pass? A second birth is to this teacher of Israel unthinkable, although the conception is not wholly wanting in the scriptures of the Old Testament. In His reply, however, Jesus does not refer to the Old Testament; there is evidence nearer at hand in the personal experience of the Lord and His disciples. That which we know we speak and that which we have seen we bear witness to. Conceived by the Spirit, baptized by the Spirit, full of the power of the Spirit, He knew Himself to be continually stirred by the Spirit's breath, and His experience must be shared by all who enter the Kingdom of God. In this there was nothing which belonged to the sphere of supra-mundane things: to be born from above, to hear the voice of the Spirit, to know the mystery of His presence and working in the inner life, are earthly things (ἐπίγεια¹) and not heavenly, belonging to the experience of man's present state and not to a remote and as yet incomprehensible future. The spiritual birth is from above, but it takes place on earth and belongs to the facts of daily life.

2. The concluding verses of ch. iii. are in form a continuation of the Baptist's words in vv. 27—30, but probably consist of remarks by the Evangelist himself based on recollections partly of the Baptist's teaching, partly of our Lord's. A reference to the Holy Spirit in v. 34 may therefore be considered here, though it cannot definitely be assigned to Christ Himself.

The Evangelist takes up the words of Jesus in v. 11, and carries them further. Jesus bears witness to that which he has seen and which he heard... The man who has received his witness thereby sets his seal

Part II. ii. to the doctrine that God is true. For he whom God sent speaks God's words, for not by measure does he give the Spirit. To accept the witness of Jesus is to accept the witness of God, for Jesus was sent by God and speaks in His name. So far the connexion is clear. But what relation does the last clause bear to this? and what is its precise meaning? Who is it that gives the Spirit, and to whom does he give it? Are we to understand that the Father gives the Spirit to the Son¹, or that the Son gives the Spirit to men? In the former case the thought will run: 'the Son cannot but speak the Father's words, seeing He has received an unlimited supply of the Divine Spirit.' In the latter it seems to be: 'that the Son speaks the words of God is evident from the unlimited power that He possesses of imparting the Spirit.' Against the second interpretation it may be urged that it anticipates the Pentecostal effusion, and is moreover perhaps less in accord with the words which follow in v. 35². On the whole it seems best to supply ὁ θεός as the nominative, and to paraphrase: 'God gives³ His Spirit to men ungrudgingly⁴; there is no limit to His bounty but that which comes from the incapacity of the recipient, and He who is sent of God is not thus limited; in His case the Divine current of light and power flows unchecked by human sin.'

⁴ Cf. Jas. i. 5 τοῦ διδόντος θεοῦ πᾶσιν ἀπλῶς, καὶ μὴ ὀνειδίζοντος.

Thus there is an implied contrast between Jesus and all other religious teachers¹, whose supply of the Spirit is bounded by their imperfect correspondence with His holy inspirations. Jesus alone speaks without limit to His power to teach, since the spiritual life realizes itself in Him to the full measure of the Divine gift. Part II. ii.

3. The conversation with the Samaritan woman in some respects offers a marked contrast to the conversation with Nicodemus. In Nicodemus the Lord meets the higher culture of His age; in the other case, He talks with a peasant, who was not even a Jew, and His manner of speaking is adapted to the circumstances. But on both occasions His subject is the same. With the untaught woman the conversation turns on the familiar well; the Spirit is not mentioned by name; yet it is impossible not to recognize in the living water of which He speaks to her the same inflow of new life of which Nicodemus had heard. Himself the gift of God, Jesus offers to give that which men cannot draw for themselves from the sources of material and intellectual well-being. Jo. iv. 7—26.

Whosoever shall have drunk of the water which I shall give him, shall not thirst for ever, but the water which I shall give him shall become within him a spring of water leaping up into eternal life. Jo. iv. 14.

Part II. ii. Here is the same conception of a new life entering into men and rising to its source in God¹. But there is progress in the teaching, for the water of life is now seen to be the gift of Jesus, and its vitality appears not only in the depths of the spirit where none but the man himself can be conscious of its presence, but in the overflow that rises, strong and sparkling, into the light of day. The water in Jacob's well lay still and dead far below the surface: the water of the Spirit, also stored below the surface, cannot rest there but must force its way upwards, a perennial spring beautifying and transfiguring the present life, and rising by leaps and bounds into a life that belongs to the coming age (ἀλλόμενον εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον). Eternal life, one of the watchwords of the Fourth Gospel, is connected in ch. iii. with faith in Jesus; in ch. vi. it is seen to come from eating His flesh and drinking His blood; in ch. x. and ch. xvii. it is represented as His direct gift. Here it is viewed as the result of the life of the Spirit in man, the issue and consummation of spiritual life, differing from it not in kind but only in permanence and in maturity.

As the Lord's conversation with the woman at the well advances, He drops the metaphor and applies what has been said to the circumstances of this Samaritan woman. The Samaritans, like the Jews, attached the highest importance to their local sanctuary²; and they did so with less reason, for the

Jew, with whom the Lord here identifies Himself (ἡμεῖς, v. 22), could claim a Divine revelation and worshipped a Deity of whom he had some certain knowledge (προσκυννοῦμεν ὃ οἶδαμεν), for the Messianic deliverance (ἡ σωτηρία) was to proceed from the bosom of the Jewish people (ἐκ τῶν Ἰουδαίων). But the controversy was not of lasting significance, for the times of Messiah were approaching or rather were already come, and under Messiah worship must cease to be localized, because it would be seen to be a spiritual reality. The hour comes and is now here¹ when the genuine worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and truth; for the Father seeks such as his worshippers. God is spirit, and his worshippers must needs worship in spirit and truth. Worship must be spiritual, since God is a purely spiritual Being. There is no express mention here of the Holy Spirit, but the spiritual worship which is claimed demands a spiritual force which is not innate in man; to worship in spirit and truth is possible only through the Spirit of God. The Spirit of God is the Spirit of the truth (Jo. xiv. 19), nay, is the truth (1 Jo. v. 6). Reality in worship as in all other spiritual acts can only be of the Spirit of the truth, and without reality worship is not acceptable to a God who Himself is the absolute Truth. Thus this saying of Christ prepares the way for later teaching in the New Testament which has to do with the relation of the Holy Spirit to Prayer. But the Samaritan woman was not ready

Part II. ii. for more than the elementary doctrine that a spiritual God demands a worship which is spiritual and therefore true to its conception and its end.

Jo. vi. 51—63. 4. The discourse in ch. vi. at first sight contrasts strongly with the teaching of chh. iii. and iv. To the audience in the Capernaum synagogue the Lord offers His own flesh and blood as the food and drink of eternal life; he that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath an eternal life...for my flesh is true food and my blood is true drink. True¹ food, true¹ drink, doubtless in the sense that it corresponds to the true life; as the life of the body is the visible and temporary expression of man's true life, so is bodily food of the food of the higher life. Such an analogy was not difficult to understand; the difficulty lay in the food of the higher life being identified with the flesh and blood of Jesus. This saying was as hard to receive as Nicodemus had found the earlier saying about the new birth, and for the same reason; it was interpreted by those who heard it on the basis of a shallow materialism. In the synagogue the Lord left His words unexplained, but to His disciples in private He gave a clue to its true interpretation.

Jo. vi. 62. What then if ye behold the Son of Man ascending where he was before? Suppose they were to see the Christ who had come down from heaven (vi. 41, 51) going up again in human form: would not this be a yet greater stumblingblock? For how could flesh and blood dwell with God? or how could the flesh and blood which had ascended to heaven be the food of men on earth? Yet in fact the Ascension would render this possible, because it would spiritualize the flesh and blood of the Son of Man; when He had ascended men would be able to touch Him and even to feed upon Him, as they could not do before the Passion and Resurrection had been crowned by the Ascension. For *the spirit is that which gives life, the flesh (as flesh) profits nothing*¹. My utterances are spirit, and (being spirit) they are life. Flesh in itself is but dead matter; spirit alone vivifies. Christ's words about eating His flesh and drinking His blood were no 'hard saying' (σκληρός ἐστιν ὁ λόγος), no dry and lifeless formula, but spirit and life, possessing a spiritual content, and therefore a vivifying power. It is Christ's flesh, His manhood, full of the Spirit and in its risen and glorified state wholly spiritualized, which is offered as the food of men. As the food is spiritual, so must also be the eating. This is not to take from the reality either of the gift or of the act by which it is appropriated²; on the contrary, the spiritual is alone real in the deepest sense of the word. The Body and Blood of Christ are through the Spirit verily and indeed taken and

Part II. ii. received by the faithful according to His word, and His word proves itself in their lives to be 'spirit and life.'

Here as in iv. 23 the Holy Spirit is not mentioned or immediately in view, yet here as there the whole teaching presupposes the action of the Spirit. It is the Spirit in the humanity of our Lord which is life-giving¹, and it is the Spirit that mediates the process by which in the Eucharist or otherwise the life-giving humanity is conveyed to believers and becomes to them the food of eternal life. The ancient Church expressed her sense of this operation of the Spirit in the Mysteries by invoking its presence both upon the elements and the communicants². All this may have been rightly evolved from our Lord's teaching, although His words enunciate only the principle that spirit is the quickening power in life.

5. In the autumn that followed the discourse at Capernaum Jesus was at Jerusalem during the Feast of Tabernacles. He was purposely late in arriving, and did not shew Himself in the Temple precincts before the middle of the Tabernacles week. Then, prophet-like, He suddenly appeared in the Temple, and began to teach. The teaching turned upon His own mission and the attitude of the Jews towards it, to which attention had been directed by the circumstances. When the last day, the great day of the Feast, arrived, the Lord made a final appeal to the crowds who filled the courts. He stood and cried, His position and the raising of His voice marking the importance of what He had to say¹. If any one thirsts, He said, let him come unto me and drink. He that believes on me, as said the Scripture, there shall flow out of his belly rivers of living water. The reader will recognize at once the affinity of this saying to the promise given to the Samaritan woman (iv. 14). But it has its own special character, connecting it with the circumstances. It was the last day of the Feast, probably the seventh, for the eighth was not strictly included in the Festival². On each of the seven days water was drawn by a priest at the Pool of Siloam, and brought amid the blowing of trumpets into the Temple-precinct, where it was received by other priests chanting Isa. xii. 3, With joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation, and was eventually poured out at the altar of burnt-offering. This ceremony was emphasized on the seventh day by the water being carried round the altar in procession seven times. The occasion lent itself to fresh and public teaching upon the Water of Life. Jesus, Himself the mystical Siloam, the Sent of God³, invites any Part II. ii. who will to come and draw from Him the living water. He who did so, He adds, should not only quench his own thirst but become a fountain of life to his fellows; not only would the Water that the Christ gave him spring up within him into life eternal, but he should be as a rock, out of whose cavity rivers of the water of life would flow forth for the refreshment of men. We are reminded of the miracles of Exod. xvii. and Numb. xx.; the 'Scripture' to which the Lord refers is doubtless the general sense of many passages which describe these scenes or spiritualize the conception of flowing waters, such as Pss. lxxviii. 16, cv. 41, Zech. xiv. 8, Isa. xliii. 19, 20¹. What the water of life signified Jesus did not explain, perhaps because the symbol was generally understood; in the Talmud² the conception of the Holy Spirit as water drawn from a well is found more than once. Thus the Evangelist's editorial note, But this he spake concerning the Spirit, may represent the impression which was made by the Lord's words on His hearers at the time. He adds from his later experience: which they were about to receive who believed upon him; for there was as yet no Spirit, and versions have made more than one attempt to qualify the last words, reading either, *The Holy Spirit was not yet upon them*¹, or *was not yet given*². Both our English versions adopt the latter expedient though they are careful by the use of italics to warn the English reader that given does not stand in the best text. But no addition is necessary even in a version if 'Spirit' is understood to mean an effusion or gift or dispensation of the Spirit, as it often does³. When Jesus spoke there was as yet no spiritual force in the world such as was brought into it at the Pentecost and afterwards swept like a great tidal wave over the face of the earth. And the reason for this was that Jesus was still in the flesh, was not yet glorified; He had not yet been seen to ascend up whither He was before the Incarnation (vi. 62), He was not yet with the Father (xvi. 7, xx. 17); and there could not be a spiritual Presence until the Presence in the flesh had been withdrawn and until the work of the Son of Man had been crowned by His exaltation to the right hand of God. Hence the Lord at the Tabernacles spoke of the great outflow of the living water as yet future (ρεύσουσιν); hence the Evangelist's comment which they were about to receive (ἔμελλον λαμβάνειν). St John looks back from days when the Pentecost

Part II. ii. was long past and 'there was Spirit' to those when the great outpouring was but a dim and unrealized hope.

It is not surprising that as there fell upon the ears of the crowd this great promise of overflowing spiritual life about to be drawn from the person of the speaker, voices were heard to say, This is truly the Prophet! This is the Christ!, or that the members of the Temple guard who had been sent to arrest Jesus returned empty-handed with the report Never spake any man after this fashion. To others the words may have seemed exorbitant or blasphemous. But the whole history of the Church and of the world from the Pentecost to the present time bears witness to their absolute truth.

Jo. x. 3. 6. It may be that in the deep thought of our Lord the Holy Spirit is the 'porter' of the fold, who opens the door to the true Shepherd of the sheep, closing it against thieves and robbers. But the details of a parable cannot be safely pressed. Moreover, as Westcott rightly says, if the Holy Spirit is intended, it is the Spirit acting through the appointed ministry. The visible 'porter' is the Bishop or Priest to whom has been committed the care of souls in any place (Mc. xiii. 34), and to whom belongs the duty of keeping watch. Nevertheless, if his vigilance is effective, and his judgement sound, this is due to the quickening and guidance of the Spirit of Christ, who by his hands opens and shuts the door of the fold.

THE Fourth Gospel in its earlier chapters reveals the Holy Spirit as the author of the spiritual life in men, and our Lord as the giver of the Spirit to those who will come to Him for the gift. In the latter part of the book, which contains the private instructions given to the disciples on the night before the Passion and after the Resurrection, the Holy Spirit is regarded in another light; the relation in which the Spirit will stand to the Christian brotherhood, the offices which it is to fulfil towards the future Church represented by the company assembled in the upper room, come here into view. The subject of the teaching on the Spirit in John iii.—vii. is the Giver of Life; the subject of the later teaching in John xiv.—xx. is the Paraclete. The first concerns the individual, the second the Body of Christ.

Jo. xiv.

1. The doctrine of the Paraclete implies the withdrawal of Jesus from the world, and was therefore naturally withheld till the eve of the Crucifixion.

It is not until the note I am going to the Father has been sounded that it is needful or even possible to add, The Father will give you another Paraclete. The word παράκλητος passed into Aramaic¹ together with its opposite κατήγορος; and it may have been used by our Lord in His intercourse with His disciples in reference to Himself; indeed this seems to be almost implied in His reference to the Spirit without explanation as ἄλλος παράκλητος. There can be little doubt that whether applied to Jesus or to the Spirit it means 'Advocate' rather than 'Comforter'. The Spirit is the other Advocate who takes up the rôle of the Son of Man and carries on certain functions which the Lord discharges towards His Church. The first and most obvious of the functions of an advocate is to defend those whose cause he undertakes from the charges laid against them by their accusers. The Lord had thus defended His disciples while He was upon earth², and He had foretold that the Spirit of their Father would defend them after His departure³. Not that He has ceased to be their Advocate since His departure, for, as St John teaches in his first Epistle, He fulfils this office where He is with the Father, protecting sinners against the Arch-enemy who 'accuses the brethren before God day and night.' Meanwhile the Spirit, whose sphere of work is on earth⁴,

Part II. iii. silences the earthly adversaries of the Church through the victory of faith which overcomes the world. The Acta martyrum, the whole history of the Church, and the lives of countless believers who have no place in history, bear witness to the fulfilment of this office of the Paraclete-Spirit in the Body of Christ¹.

But the work of the 'other Paraclete' was not limited to defence in an age of persecution. The Lord's promise is: I will ask the Father, and he shall give you another Advocate that he may be with you for ever. The Father had already given them an Advocate who had taught, guarded, protected, kept them from evil; but His abode in the flesh was limited, and now drawing to an end. The Son of Man could not remain to the end of time; permanence was possible only for a purely spiritual Power. Such a Power was now to be sent, even the Spirit of the truth². I am the Truth, Jesus had just said; and the work of the Incarnate Truth on earth was to be taken up by the Spirit of the truth and carried forward as long as the present order should endure. The unbelieving world would indeed be wholly unconscious of this invisible Presence: which the world cannot receive, for it beholds

*it not nor yet knows it*¹; there is nothing which strikes the vision or appeals to the natural understanding; to the former being pure spirit it cannot shew itself; the latter is closed against it by lack of spiritual sympathy. But the Spirit is not sent to the world, at least in the character of Paraclete; the mission of the Paraclete is to the disciples of Jesus who have already learnt to apprehend spiritual things through fellowship with the Lord; you know it (the Spirit), for it dwells with you (παρ' ὑμῶν) *and shall be*² in you (ἐν ὑμῶν)³. If with Westcott and Hort we read And is in you, the sense must be that even during the earthly life of Jesus the Spirit was already in their midst in the person of the Christ. But the documentary evidence for the future is scarcely inferior, and it accords with the series of futures which precedes (τηρήσετε, ἐρωτήσω, δώσει)⁴. 'It dwells with you,' describes the experience which was just about to end; 'it shall be in you,' that which was about to begin. Between the two there would be but the briefest interval; the going would be followed almost immediately by a coming. *I will not leave you bereaved*⁵, *I am coming to you*⁶. Yet a little and the

Part II iii. *world beholds me no more, but you behold me*¹; *for I live, and ye shall live*². The ascended Christ would be visible to His disciples in the Spirit; the spiritual life into which He should then have wholly passed would find its counterpart in the life of the Spirit which after the Pentecost would be theirs as it was His. In that day you (ὁμεῖς) shall know that I am in my Father and you in me and I in you. In the coming life of the Spirit they, if not the world, would realize more and more (γνώσεσθε) the perfect union of the Father and the Son and their own union with the Incarnate Son through His Spirit in them and their life in Him.

2. In vv. 25 ff. the Lord returns to the future which lay before the disciples. The 'other Paraclete' is to be not only a perpetual Presence in their midst, but a perpetual Teacher. The teaching of Jesus in the flesh was now at an end; these were among His last words; the voice that spake as never man spake was not to be heard again. Was the teaching itself to cease? His answer is reassuring. These things I have spoken to you while dwelling with you; but the Paraclete, the Holy Spirit which the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things and remind you of all things that I said to you. The 'other Paraclete' is to carry on the Lord's office of teaching. Again he is identified with the Spirit, now called the Holy Spirit (τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον), perhaps to proclaim His oneness with the Spirit who spake by the Prophets. Christ's Spirit of the Truth, the Paraclete of the future Church, was not a new Spirit but the Divine Spirit itself, invested with a new mission, sent by the Father in the name of Jesus, as Jesus Himself came in the name of His Father and not in His own (Jo. v. 43). What is the exact sense of the phrase 'in the name' is a point perhaps as yet imperfectly explored; but apart from the general question light may be gained here by comparing the missions of the Spirit and the Son. The Son came to represent, to interpret, to glorify the Father; and since the Son Himself was but partly understood even by His own, the Spirit was sent to reveal the Son. Neither the person of the Lord nor His work was intelligible to those who saw and heard Him, until the Spirit illuminated both. In the Spirit Christ came again, a Christ transfigured and glorified. As a teacher the Paraclete would extend the scope of our Lord's earthly ministry without abandoning any part of the ground that Christ had occupied. He will teach you all things, not universal knowledge, but all that belongs to the sphere of spiritual truth¹; nothing that is essential to the knowledge of God or to the guidance of life shall be wanting. But as His teaching will be in Christ's name, it will

Part II. iii. follow in the lines of Christ's teaching; 'He will remind you of all that I taught.' The larger light of the Apostolic age would be in fact a reminiscence, a reawakening of the light kindled in Galilee and Jerusalem by Jesus Christ. Even the words spoken by Him would in many cases be brought back to the memories of those who heard them, or if not the words, at least their substance¹. The survival of so large an amount of these personal recollections in the four Gospels may reasonably be claimed as a fulfilment of this promise. But the 'reminding' went of course much further than a mere recovery of the Lord's sayings; it enabled those who had been present to live through the Ministry again with a new appreciation of its meaning; logion and parable, question and answer, command and promise returned to them in new lights, and formed, it cannot be doubted, the basis of the Apostles' own teaching, and ultimately the nucleus of that great stream of Christian tradition which has moulded Christian belief and practice from their time to our own.

Jo. xv. 26f. 3. The third passage in the last Discourse in which our Lord speaks of the Paraclete carries us a step further. When the Paraclete shall have come, whom I will send to you from the Father, the Spirit of the truth which goes forth from the Father, he shall bear witness concerning me; and you also bear witness, because from the beginning² you are with me. Here the double title the Paraclete, the Spirit of Truth is repeated from xiv. 16, but instead of the clause which the Father shall send in my name, added in xiv. 26, we now have the words whom I (ἐγώ) will send to you from the Father...which goes forth from the Father. The Paraclete, Christ teaches, is to be sent from the Father (παρὰ τοῦ πατρός) even as He Himself was¹; and whenever the Spirit goes forth², it goes forth from the Father, as sent by Him. But in the approaching mission of the Paraclete Spirit, the immediate Sender of the Spirit will be the Incarnate Son, in whose name the Paraclete is to be sent and of whose own mission His coming is to be fruit and sequel. And the Paraclete being sent from the Father by the Son will bear witness of the Son who sent Him; being the Spirit of the Truth³, He must needs bear His testimony to the truth. The testimony of the Spirit will

³ See on this title of the Spirit Dr. Hort's Hulsean Lectures, pp. 57—59: "He goes forth, Christ teaches, from the Father, the God who is true, and bears witness to Christ as the Truth...the voice of the Spirit will be heard only in the interpretation of truth, and especially of the Truth...the truth given in Christ will need from age to age His expounding to unlock its stores."

Part II. iii. be given in the words, the actions, the lives of men. But it will not supersede human testimony, or be indistinguishable from it; the Spirit is not a substitute for the labour or the personality of the disciple, but a cooperating force: 'and ye, too (the Lord adds), *bear witness*¹,' as those who are qualified to speak of Me in virtue of an experience which goes back to the beginning of the Ministry. Experience by itself could not have qualified the Eleven to bear their witness before the world, nor could the Spirit have supplied the lack of experience. The life in Galilee was crowned by the Gift of Pentecost, without which its lessons would have been barren of results, but on the other hand the Gift of Pentecost would have yielded widely different results if it had not fallen on men who were with Jesus and could testify to what they had seen and heard². Nor was this collaboration of the human witness with the Divine limited to the first age; it extends to the whole life of the Church, which is a continuous joint-testimony of the Spirit and the Bride.

The Lord has now said enough to make it clear that His departure will be no unmixed loss to His disciples, nay, will be on the whole a gain. I tell you the truth: it is profitable for you that I (ἐγὼ) go away. For if I go not away (ἀπέλθω), the Paraclete will not come (ἔλθῃ) unto you; but if I take my journey hence (πορευθῶ) I will send him unto you. Part II. iii.

The mission of the Spirit could not begin till the mission of the Son was ended; Jesus could not come in the Spirit till He had ceased to live in the flesh. The Lord's final victory over death, and the spiritualizing of His humanity which began at the Resurrection and culminated in His return to the Father at the Ascension, were the necessary conditions of the sending of His Spirit to the Church. Furthermore, the gift of the Spirit could be claimed by Him for men only when He had taken His place as the Advocate of men in the Presence of God¹.

All this was realized, if not at the time yet afterwards, when the Spirit had come. But though the departure of the Lord might be necessary, the question remained what the Church could gain by exchanging the visible presence of Jesus for the invisible fellowship of His Spirit. This question is answered, so far as it could be answered before the Pentecost, by a revelation of the work which the Spirit was coming to do upon the world. When he has come, he (ἐκεῖνος, i.e. the Paraclete) shall convict (ἐλέγξει) the world in respect of sin, and of righteousness and of judgement. In respect of sin, in that they believe not on me; in respect of righteousness, in that I go my way to the Father and ye no more behold me; in respect of judgement, in that the ruler of this world has been judged. Jo. xvi. 8ff.

Part II. iii. threefold. (a) He shall convict¹ the world in respect of sin, bringing it home to men's consciences, detecting and laying bare their guilt. Which of you, the Lord had asked, convicts me of sin? and no answer had been returned. But if the world could not convict Him, His Spirit could and should convict the world. That was perhaps no hard task, for heathen satirists did the same effectively enough in the century that followed the Ascension. But the Lord specifies a particular act which was the last that the world seemed capable of recognizing as a sin. The Spirit was to reveal the sinfulness of refusing to believe on Jesus; the men who had witnessed His signs and heard His words unmoved, who had shouted Crucify him and without remorse reviled Him as He hung on the Cross, the same men, when the light of the Spirit was turned upon their conduct, would discover in it the most damning of all sins, a rejection of the Only-begotten Son of God², and cry out in their distress, What shall we do?

Further, (b) the Spirit shall convict the world in respect of righteousness. What 'righteousness' meant had been shewn in the earthly life of Jesus; His death completed the revelation, by displaying a sinless humanity tested by the severest suffering and passing through it and through death itself without reproof. Yet the spectacle made no impression on His own generation; the world remained unconvinced even by the Cross. Jesus passed out of sight; He went to the Father; even the disciples 'beheld Him no more'; nothing was left but the promise that His invisible Spirit should work in the hearts of men. But it was this very transition from the visible to the invisible, from the flesh to the Spirit, which led friends as well as enemies to realize for the first time the grandeur of the life which had failed to make any adequate impression so long as it was before their eyes. Then for the first time the vision of a sinless humanity burst upon the world with the results that we know, changing both the conception which men had formed of the Person of Jesus, and the standards of human conduct. The same Power which convinced the world of its sin convinced it also of the righteousness of Him whom it had refused, not only in the sense that His innocence was established and His sinlessness admitted, but that the perfect life of Jesus henceforth filled a place in men's thoughts such as no other noble and heroic life has ever filled. For here, it was recognized at last, is the one perfect model of human righteousness, which God has accepted and crowned by admitting it into His presence¹; this is the Righteous

Part II. iii. one¹ who is with the Father, and through whom men may attain to the righteousness of God.

Lastly, (c) the Spirit shall convict the world in respect of judgement. For now that Sin and Righteousness have stood face to face in the world, and Righteousness has triumphed over Sin and Death and is at the right hand of God, there must come a time when the long war between these irreconcilable forces shall end in a final separation. A crisis is at hand, and even now is going forward in human history²; it began with the judgement which was passed on the ruler of this world by the life and death of Jesus, a judgement which is still in force and fruitful in results³. The Spirit brings this fact home to the minds of men, and they live henceforth as those who know that since the Resurrection the issues of the great struggle are determined, and every day is bringing nearer the final victory of righteousness and the final doom of sin.

Thus the Paraclete Spirit by His coming was to shift the whole standpoint of human opinion with reference to the vital questions of Sin and Righteousness and the conflict between them. And He was to do this, not for the Church only or even chiefly—for the Lord had already decided these fundamental points for His own—but for ‘the world.’ The effect of His conviction of the world is to be seen to-day in the changed attitude of modern thought and practice when it is compared with that of Graeco-Roman society in the time of our Lord. The modern world is far from being under the control of the Spirit of Christ, but pagan as it may remain in heart it has been convinced of certain great ethical truths, and can never return to the worst vices or the heartless selfishness of the older heathendom. Part II. iii.

5. The discourse now passes from the Spirit's work upon the world to His more direct action upon the disciples of Christ. I have yet many things to say unto you, but you cannot bear them now. But when he (ἐκεῖνος) shall have come, the Spirit of the truth, he shall guide you into all the truth; for he shall not speak from himself, but whatsoever things he hears he shall speak, and the things that are coming he shall declare to you. He shall glorify me, for he shall take from that which is mine and declare it to you. All things whatsoever the Father has are mine; for this cause I said that he (the Paraclete) takes of that which is mine and shall declare it to you. Jo. xvi.

The Samaritan Woman knew that when Messiah came He would declare all things¹. But at the end of His life there were many things which Jesus had yet to say, and could not say even then to the Eleven, because of their incapacity to support the

 for them to bear. The time was coming when He would teach them all He had to teach, telling them of the Father with unfettered speech. But this He could do only through the Spirit of the truth, to whom it belongs to guide the spirits of men into the truth as a whole (εἰς πᾶσαν τὴν Jo. xiv. 6, ἀλήθειαν). If Jesus is the Way (ἡ ὁδός), the Spirit xvi. 13. is the Guide (ὁ ὁδηγός)² who leads into it, i.e. into the truth in its completeness as it is in Jesus³. As the Son did not speak 'from Himself' (Jo. vii. 16 ff.), i.e. was not the Source of His own teaching, but spoke what He had received from the Father, so the Spirit will not speak from Himself as from a separate store of knowledge but will declare what He hears in that inner Life which is full of the voices of God⁴: He is to be the Witness of the

 "Jn prefers to say that Jesus taught by 'proverbs,' i.e. by truths of general import, whereas the Paraclete was to teach truths of particular import, appealing to the experience of the individual."

Eternal Father. His teaching will therefore be essentially one with the teaching of Christ, since its Source is the same. But He will carry forward the revelation of Christ and complete it. He will Jo. xvi. 13.
declare the coming things: the things of that great and untried life which was about to open before the Church at the Pentecost and to reach its perfection at the Second Coming; the things of the new age, the dispensation of the Spirit; and, less distinctly seen, the things of the more distant future when God shall be all in all. Thus, while this promise includes the revelations of the Christian Prophets, it covers also the whole process of unfolding before the Christian Society in the Apostolic writings, in the work of her Bishops and Doctors, and in the experience of life, the ideals, the polity, and the prospects of the Body of Christ.

Another side of the Spirit's work of guidance remains to be stated. He shall glorify me (ἐμὲ, Jo. xvi. 14. emphatic¹). Even to the world He will hold up the sinlessness, the righteousness of Jesus. But the glorification will be carried further in those who are 'led of the Spirit.' How? Not by shedding upon the Person and work of the Lord any new glory from without, but simply by revealing that which is and always has been His. All that a Paul or a John has said under the teaching of the Spirit about the glory of Christ is but a disclosure of that which

Part II. iii. They have brought much to light, but they have added nothing to the glory which He had with the Father before the world was. The Spirit in glorifying the Son takes of that which is the Son's and declares it. That is all, but how much it is! For that which is the Son's comprises all that is the Father's; all things that are mine, the Lord says in His great concluding prayer, are thine, and the things that are thine are mine, the difference being this only, that the things which are His are so by the Father's gift. The intercommunion and interchange are absolute. The Only-begotten interprets the Father; the Spirit interprets the Son, and the Father in the Son. Thus the revelation of God is completed by the coming of the Spirit. The Lord's departure was not to be a withdrawal of the manifested glory of God, but a further stage in the manifestation. A little while—so this long exposition of the work of the Paraclete ends—a little while and ye no more behold me (θεωρεῖτε), and again a little while and ye shall see (ὄψεσθε) me... again I shall see (ὄψομαι) you. The visible form of the Son of Man was passing away, but the true and unending vision of His glory was on the point to begin. The disciples would see Him again and be seen by Him, but in the Spirit; and the joy of a spiritual vision none could take from them.

6. Almost the last words of the departing Lord were of this 'Other Paraclete' in whose coming He would Himself return. When He shewed himself alive after his passion, His first interview with the Eleven dealt with the same topic, but from another point of view. The gift of the Spirit was now no longer a hope but a fact. Part II. iii.

The Lord, standing in the midst of His disciples on Easter night, brought them the firstfruits of His victory. Peace be to you! As my Father has commissioned (ἀπέσταλκεν)¹ me, I also send (πέμπω) you². Then, breathing on them, He added, Take Holy Spirit; if ye remit the sins of any, they have been remitted; if ye retain the sins of any, they have been retained. His 'peace,' repeated with emphasis³, is no mere salutation, but recalls the words spoken immediately after the promise of the Paraclete: a peace that is mine I give you; not as the world gives give I you. Jo. xx. 19 ff.
Jo. xiv. 27. What He gave before the Passion on that night of conflicting emotions He gives once again in the first joy of the Resurrection. But to peace He adds now another gift which is the direct consequence of His triumph over death. The Eleven have before them a new destiny, and for its fulfilment they need a new life. The Lord Himself had received from the Father a commission which He had executed so far as it was to be fulfilled by His personal service on earth. But the commission itself, as the perfect suggests, remained in force, and in virtue of it He now sends the Eleven and the whole Church to carry on His

Part II. iii. ministry in the world. Of such a mission they were in themselves as incapable as an inanimate body is incapable of performing the functions of a living man. Hence the words were followed immediately by an act which symbolized the giving of life. The oldest

Gen. ii. 7. story of the creation of man tells us how *the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils (LXX. ἐνεφύσησεν εἰς τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ) the breath of life, and man became a living soul*¹. Even so the new humanity, represented by the little company in the upper room, was now inspired by the risen Christ with the breath of the higher life, and His insufflation was the visible sign of this inward grace. Sacramental words accompanied the sign: *take Holy Spirit*². Here are two things to be noted: (1) it is not the person of the Paraclete-Spirit, but the inspiration of His life which is communicated; and (2) the use of λάβετε rather than *δέχεσθε*³ implies that the gift is not an opus operatum, but a vital force which must be met by personal effort and not passively received.

³ Westcott: "The choice of word seems to mark the personal action of man in the reception. He is not wholly passive." So at the institution of the Eucharist the Lord says λαβετε, not δέχεσθε (Mc. xiv. 32).

The Easter gift of the Spirit stands in the most intimate relation with the mission of the Catholic Church, as the great words that follow shew. The business of the Church is the remitting and retaining of the sins of men, a spiritual office which calls for spiritual vitality no less than for the authority of a Divine mission. If I send you provides the authority, take Holy Spirit gives the vital force which is no less necessary. Part II. iii.

The question has often been asked in what relation the gift of Easter Day stands to the gift of Whitsunday. Bishop Westcott, following Godet, replies that "the one answers to the power of the Resurrection and the other to the power of the Ascension," i.e. the one brought the grace of quickening, the other that of endowment. But besides this, if we may judge from the words that follow, the Easter gift was specially connected with the future work of the Body of Christ. Its realization was therefore to be expected not in any immediate quickening or endowing of the Eleven and their company, of which in fact there are but few traces in the history of the forty days between the Resurrection and the Ascension, but rather in that which manifested itself after the Pentecost, as their great task opened gradually before them. For the moment, therefore, the gift was potential rather than actual¹;

Part II. iii. it became an actuality when the Church began to remit and retain sins; with the need of quickening the quickening which had been assured was experienced. But when it came, at Pentecost or afterwards, it came in virtue of the Resurrection of the Lord and His sacramental insufflation. It had been in the possession of the Church from the moment that the Risen Lord breathed into her the Breath of Life, although before the Pentecost she was scarcely conscious of her new powers, and even after the Pentecost realized them only by degrees¹.

FOR our purpose it is convenient to divide the Epistles of St Paul into two large groups, namely those which precede the Roman captivity and those which were written during the captivity or after it. The first group includes the Epistles to the Thessalonians (2), Corinthians (2), Galatians, and Romans; of these the first four will occupy the present chapter.

I. The two earliest letters of St Paul were addressed about the middle year of the first century¹ to one of the newly planted churches of Macedonia, the church of the Thessalonians in God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. At the outset of the first epistle we learn that in Europe as in Asia Minor the preaching of the Gospel was attended by manifestations of the Spirit. Our gospel, the missionaries say, *came not unto you in word only*⁵ but also in power and in Holy Spirit and much assurance; i.e. 'we delivered our message with a Part II. iv. power beyond that of mere eloquence, with an inspiration which proclaimed its Divine origin and a strength of conviction which left no doubt of our sincerity.' Such were the preachers, and the hearers caught the contagion of their faith: you became imitators of us and of the Lord, having received the word in much tribulation with joy of Holy Spirit. The same Spirit which gave strength and assurance to the preachers wrought in the converts a joyful acceptance of the message which was not checked by the violent opposition of the Synagogue aided by a truculent mob.

xvii. 5 ff.

Nor was it only in this first acceptance of the Gospel and the early enthusiasm of their new faith that the Thessalonians manifested the power of the Spirit. In a Greek seaport town such as Thessalonica, it was a daily struggle for converts from heathenism to maintain purity of life. For this struggle the Apostle arms the Thessalonians with the assurance that they had received the Spirit of God. *God called us not for impurity but in sanctification. Therefore he who sets at naught this calling sets at naught not man but God, who gives his Spirit, the Holy Spirit, to enter into you*¹. The Christian calling moves in a sphere of progressive holiness (ἐν ἁγιασμῷ), and the Divine Gift which is poured continually² into the hearts of believers

² Lightfoot paraphrases: "Who is ever renewing this witness against uncleanness in fresh accessions of the Holy Spirit."

renders any act of impurity on the part of a Christian a contempt of God, whose presence within him by the Holy Spirit is a constant witness for holiness and warning against the sins of the flesh. Part II. iv.

Further, at Thessalonica the Spirit was manifested not only in the faith of the founders of the Church and the lives of its members, but by the gift—to these Gentile converts, the entirely new gift—of prophecy. It appears that prophecy was in danger of being undervalued in this Greek Church, whether because, as afterwards at Corinth, the more showy ‘glossolaly’ was preferred to it, or because it had been abused by some who made it the occasion of wild and even dangerous utterances¹.

Against this attitude towards a great spiritual gift St Paul takes a firm stand. The Spirit extinguish not, prophesyings make not of no account; put all things to the proof, hold fast the good, from every evil form² abstain. 1 Thess. v.
19 ff. ‘It is not for believers to throw water on the fire which has been kindled by the Spirit in the heart of a fellow Christian or to make light of utterances which claim to be His inspirations. There is a better course: submit everything of this kind to such tests as may be ready to your hand and as the Spirit itself has given you in the scriptures, in the experience of life, in the consensus of believers, and retain³ all that can endure this process, refraining³ from every kind of utterance which

Part II. iv. may tend to evil.' It happens that the second letter
 2 Thess. ii. affords an instance of such an utterance. An im-
 2^a. pression had been created at Thessalonica that the Coming of the Lord was imminent or even had begun (ἐνέστηκεν), and the result of this belief had been to create restlessness and neglect of duty.
 Cf. 1 Thess. iii. 6. How it arose the Apostle does not seem to know, but he suggests that it may have come *by spirit*¹,
 i.e. through a prophet who claimed inspiration.
 2 Thess. ii. Even in that case, the idea was to be rejected as 3^a. deceptive; it belonged to the 'bad class' of prophetic
 1 Thess. v. utterances which would not endure the test of exam-
 2^a. ination, as St Paul proceeds to shew.

✓ To return to the first Epistle; the Apostle con-
 1 Thess. v. tinues: And the God of peace himself sanctify you
 2^a. in your whole nature (ὁλοτελεῖς), and may your spirit and your soul and your body be preserved entire (ὁλόκληρον)², without blame, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Here, though the Divine Spirit is not named, His action is involved in the prayer for sanctification, since it is by His Holy Spirit that God produces and perfects holiness in the creature.
 Whatever may be the judgement which is to be passed on the utterances of the Christian prophets,

² 'Ὀλοτελεῖς, 'in your completeness'; ὁλόκληρον, 'with every part represented.' Lightfoot points out that the latter word is "applied especially to sacrifices," comparing Rom. xii. 1, where the bodies of Christians are represented as α θυσία ζῶσα. The Spirit sanctifies the Christian's sacrifice (i.e. his body and soul and spirit) that it may be found at the Parousia complete in all its parts.

there can be no question as to the value and need of personal sanctity, and this sanctifying work of the Spirit must cover the whole ground of the personal life, the body, the emotions and affections, and finally that side of the individual being which faces God and the spiritual world, the human spirit which in some sense corresponds to the Spirit of God and is the especial seat of His activity. The whole man is to be kept against the Master's return, that it may be ready for His future service, and this can only be if the whole is under the sanctifying power of the Divine Spirit. An entire consecration can alone preserve human nature in the fulness of its powers for the life where God is all in all.

This ethical side of the Spirit's work in believers comes into sight again in the second Epistle. God chose you from the beginning¹ unto salvation in sanctification of (the) Spirit and belief of (the) truth. ^{2 Thess. ii. 13.} The Divine selection of the Thessalonian Church worked itself out in a progressive holiness imparted by the Divine Spirit, and on the side of the converts themselves, by their acceptance of the truth, i.e. of the Gospel of Christ. Thus the work of the Spirit is brought into relation with the purpose of the Father, whose choice it carries into effect²; and the whole process is seen to issue in 'salvation,' i.e. that restoration of the composite nature of man to health

² Cf. 1 Pet. i. 2.

Part II. iv. and fulness of life which it was the end of the Incarnation to effect.

2. All these references to the Holy Spirit are consistent with the early date of the Epistles to the Thessalonians, for they do not carry us beyond the experience of primitive Christianity. When we proceed to the next two letters, we find that the Apostle has begun, in view of the growing perplexities of his work, to think out his faith in many directions, and not least in reference to the work of the Spirit of Christ.

In the Epistles to Corinth the general outlook is not very dissimilar to that in the Epistles to Thessalonica. Again the Apostle is dealing chiefly with Greek converts living in a commercial city; the same dangers to a great extent threatened the two communities, and the same general counsels were needed. At Corinth, however, influences were at work which were not felt in the Macedonian seaport: a disposition to form rival factions within the Christian body; an anti-Pauline, probably Judaistic, spirit; an intellectualism which stumbled at fundamental Christian truth; a levity which refused to take the great realities of life seriously, and trifled with the most solemn of Christian ordinances and with the spiritual gifts. In dealing with this new situation St Paul is led to present the ministry of the Spirit in new lights which lead us some steps further towards a fuller Pneumatology.

As in his first Epistle to the Thessalonians, St Paul starts by referring to the manifestation of the Spirit in the experience of his own early ministry at Corinth. At Corinth as at Thessalonica his preaching had been effective in a high degree, and its strength had lain in the power of the Spirit. The Apostle altogether disclaims the rôle of the Greek rhetor or sophist. My discourse and my preaching were not in persuasive words of wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and power. The Corinthians had heard from him none of those artifices of speech to which they were accustomed in the lectures of the vagrant philosopher: instead of philosophical proofs (ἀποδείξεις) he had offered a convincing appeal to the consciences of men. It was the moral strength of that appeal that had prevailed rather than its intellectual force, as the Greeks of that age judged intellectual force; and the result was what he had in fact contemplated, that the conversion of the Corinthian Gentiles was not to be ascribed to the preacher, but to the Spirit of God.

1 Cor. ii.

Yet a Christian philosophy, a Divine wisdom there was, and this was known to the preachers of the Cross. For to us God revealed the things which He prepared for those who love Him through the Spirit, for the Spirit searches all things, even the depths of God. For who among men knows (οἶδεν) the things of a man but the spirit of the man which is in him? So also the things of God none has discerned (ἔγνωκεν)¹ but the Spirit of God. 'The Part II. iv. Spirit is the revealer of the wisdom of God¹, because the Spirit explores the mind of God, even those depths of the Divine knowledge and will which are inscrutable to man². As in man there is a self-conscious life which is conversant with the secrets of his heart, so it is with the nature after which human nature is modelled; the Divine Spirit is cognizant of³ the secrets of God. And this Spirit has been given to us. We received not the spirit of the world, which finds its expression in the wisdom of this present order⁴, but the Spirit which is from (ἐκ) God, issuing from Him whose Spirit it is, that we might know, by possessing them (εἰδῶμεν), the gifts bestowed upon us by God. This practical knowledge of God, derived from His Spirit which is in us, is our philosophy, and supplies the matter of our higher teaching; of which gifts also we speak, not in words taught of human wisdom, but in words taught of the Spirit, matching⁵ spiritual things with spiritual; keeping the things of the Spirit of God free from intermixture with the non-spiritual ideas and terms of a worldly philosophy, and blending them with truths of the same order, we express them in words which lend themselves to spiritual thoughts. But there are those for whom spiritual thoughts and the words that express them have no meaning. *The psychic man¹ does not receive (δέχεται) the things of the Spirit of God, for they are folly² to him, and he cannot take cognizance (γινῶναι) of them, because they are scrutinized (ἀνακρίνεται³) by spiritual methods. But the spiritual man, while he scrutinizes everything, is himself scrutinized by none; there is in him that which defies scrutiny and remains a mystery to the unspiritual. Men from this point of view consist of two classes; those in whom the lower rational life (ψυχὴ) predominates, and those who are guided by the higher. The man who belongs to the former class has no conception of spiritual realities; he is incapable of apprehending them or even examining their claims, since they can be investigated only by spiritual faculties which he never possessed, or which through long disuse and atrophy can no longer fulfil their functions. On the other hand the man in whom the spiritual nature is developed can pass in review all the facts of life and form a judgement upon them which is essentially sound and true, although his own position is an enigma to the rest of men who have no capacity for understanding it. *We Christians have Christ's mind⁴, to the world which through its wisdom knew not God. None can comprehend or explore the mind of the Lord, but believers in some measure possess it through the indwelling of the Spirit of Christ.'

Four passages¹ follow which may be grouped together, since they describe the ethical results of this indwelling of the Spirit. In the first and last of these those in whom the Spirit dwells are repre-you not that you are a temple of God and that the the temple of God, God shall destroy that man; for the temple of God is holy; and such are you.* And 1 Cor. vi. 19 f. again, with a directly personal reference: Know ye not that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit that is in you, which you have from God, and that you are not your own, for you were bought for a price? So then glorify God in your body. As in the Greek temples at Corinth, the temple of Aphrodite on the Acropolis, the temple of Poseidon on the Isthmus, the innermost shrine was occupied by the image that represented the deity; as at Jerusalem the Holy of Holies, though it contained no image of God, was for Israel the Divine dwelling-place. Νοὺς Χριστοῦ however is more appropriate to the subject in hand than πνεῦμα Χριστοῦ would have been. 'Christ's mind' is shared by Christians: they maintain the same general attitude towards the problems of life; their philosophy is His, and not the wisdom of the world.

place on earth ; so the Christian congregation in every place where the Church had been planted, and even the body of the individual believer, had become a holy place, a sanctuary of the Divine Spirit which dwells in the Ecclesia collectively and in its members as individuals. Both collectively and individually believers are in virtue of their baptism consecrated shrines of the presence of God, and in both capacities it is laid upon them to guard the sanctity of the Divine abode. The heathen deities did not require from their worshippers any jealous watch against the intrusion of immorality ; on the contrary, as the Corinthians knew, the great temple on the Acro-corinthus was a vast home of licensed vice¹. But the Spirit which dwells in the Church is essentially holy, and the sanctuary of the Holy Spirit must be holy not only by a sacramental consecration but through the maintenance of the strictest ethical purity. As the vengeance of the deity was expected to fall on any who desecrated his shrine, so would the Living God surely visit with His judgements the Church or the baptized soul that defiled the sanctuary of the Spirit. The general lesson is clear : ' You are God's consecrated shrine, through the Spirit's indwelling, and you are therefore relatively holy ; beware lest your relation to the Holy Spirit be your ruin. The body has been redeemed, the body has been sanctified ; let it fulfil its proper end, that of bringing glory to the God whose temple it is.'

The other two references to the Spirit in 1 Cor. vi. reveal the greatness of the change which faith and baptism made in the moral condition of many of the early converts from heathenism. After enumerating ten of the worst vices practised in the most immoral city of Greece St Paul proceeds: And some of you were such (ταῦτά τινες ἦτε); but you washed yourselves, but you were sanctified, but you were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and in the Spirit of our God. 'You washed away your former defilements¹ in the baptismal bath, you consecrated yourselves to the service of God, you were accepted by God as righteous in His sight, on the basis of faith in Jesus Christ and the recognition of His sovereignty over your lives, and in the power of the Divine Spirit which you received from the Christians' God.' Negatively, they had broken with their past life; positively, they had entered on the life of the consecrated and accepted servants of God; and this great moral revolution was effected by the Holy Spirit sent by Jesus Christ from the Father.

In the last of this group of passages the Apostle finds in the believer's baptismal incorporation into Christ a sufficient dissuasive from the common Greek sin of fornication. According to Gen. ii. 24 a man and his wife are one flesh, and this principle holds good where there is sexual union without the marriage-bond. The body of a Christian belongs to Christ, and is a member of His Body; and he who takes that which is Christ's and unites it with the flesh of a harlot is guilty of an intolerable act of desecration. But the Apostle has a further motive for purity. The union betwixt Christ and His Church is such as may well satisfy the deepest cravings of human nature, and it certainly forbids any union which degrades nature or which ministers to the lusts of the flesh. He that is joined to the Lord is one spirit, i.e. by partaking of Christ's Spirit he is spiritually one with Christ, and Christ with him. To believe this true was to be armed against the temptations of the most corrupt society, for it created a strong central force in human life which formed a counter-attraction to the power of evil.

But the greater number of the references which this Epistle makes to the work of the Holy Spirit are concerned with spiritual gifts which were not directly ethical or common to all Christians: the charismata which served to promote the enrichment of the Christian life rather than the ends of personal holiness. To these we must now turn.

Once the Apostle speaks, but incidentally and with great reserve, of his own inspiration. After giving his judgement¹ on a questionable point he claims consideration for it on the ground that he believed himself to share the gift of inspiration with teachers such as Cephas and Apollos:

Part II. iv. *for*¹ I think that I also have God's Spirit, i.e. 'in common with others who are called to be the guides of believers, I am conscious of a Divine assistance² in judgements which relate to moral and spiritual questions, over and above that general enlightenment which guides all believers in the fulfilment of their individual duty.' But he recognizes also other special gifts which belonged not only to teachers but to many who held no official position in the Church, and of these he speaks at length in chapters xii.—xiv.

A new section of the Epistle begins at xii. 1, *On the spiritual gifts*³. Before entering upon these St Paul lays down a canon which is to be borne in mind when such manifestations of the Spirit are discussed. No one, speaking in God's Spirit, says, 'Jesus is anathema'; and no one can say 'Jesus is Lord,' except in Holy Spirit. The Jewish adversary who anathematized Jesus in the synagogue or before the heathen, had no part in the Spirit of God; the humblest Christian who uttered with conviction the shortest confession of his faith did so in the power of the Divine Spirit, though he might not possess the charismata. This premised, the Apostle proceeds: There are differences in gifts, but the same Spirit; and there are differences in ministries, but the same Lord; and there are differences in workings, and the same God who works all things in all. As there is one Lord whom all Christians serve, and yet there are many forms of service; as we all have one God, and yet there are many operations of the Divine grace; so is there one Spirit, and yet a diversity of His gifts. To each the manifestation (φανέρωσις) of the Spirit is given with a view to the profit of the Body of Christ. For to one through the Spirit is given a word of wisdom, and to another a word of knowledge according to the same Spirit; to another faith, in the same Spirit, and to another gifts of healings, in the one Spirit, and to another workings of miraculous powers; to another prophecy, to another discernings of spirits, to another kinds of tongues, and to another interpretation of tongues. But all these the one self-same Spirit works, dividing severally to each according as it wills. Nine manifestations of the Spirit are enumerated here, and it is easy to discover in the list a certain order. The first two are endowments of the Christian teacher which are rarely found in the same individual; one is distinguished by his insight into Divine mysteries (σοφία), another by the intellectual breadth or acuteness which creates a scientific theology (γνώσις). The next three belong to the thaumaturgic side of early Christianity, the faith which could move mountains (xiii. 2), the therapeutic powers over disease (χαρίσματα ἰαμάτων) which some believers exhibited and are said still to exhibit, the working of physical signs and wonders (ἐνεργή-

Part II. iv. ματα δυνάμεων). Lastly, we have two pairs of spiritual gifts which were perhaps the most widely exercised: prophecy, with its cognate power of distinguishing the true prophet from the false (προφητεία, διακρίσεις πνευμάτων), and 'glossolaly,' with its necessary accompaniment, ability to interpret 'tongues' for the benefit of the Church (γένη γλωσσῶν, ἑρμηνεία γλωσσῶν).

The Apostle then works back from these manifestations of the Spirit to the original act by which all Christians were incorporated into the Body of Christ, his purpose being to shew that great diversity is consistent with a true unity. In the human body, which is one, the members are many, and they are differentiated by their functions. The Body of Christ, into which we were all admitted by the one Baptism of the Spirit, in like manner consists of many members who, notwithstanding their corporate unity, are distinguished by the diversity of their powers and services. These gifts and functions, proceeding from one Spirit and exercised in one Body, are not only different in purpose but of varying importance, and the Apostle arranges them in the orderly sequence of a descending scale¹.

1 Cor. xii. 28. God appointed some in the Church, first apostles, secondly prophets, thirdly teachers, then miraculous powers, then gifts of healings, then the helps² which support the weak and the *powers of guidance*¹ which pilot the course of the Church; and lastly, the various kinds of tongues which make themselves heard in the assemblies of the Saints. All cannot be apostles or all prophets, nor can all speak with tongues; for this would destroy the completeness, the balance, and even the efficiency of the Body of Christ; the lower gifts and functions are not less necessary to the life and work of the whole organism than the higher, and all are in their degree manifestations of the presence of the Divine Spirit of which all believers are partakers through the first draught² of the water of life.

At this point there comes the great episode of St Paul's praise of love. It is important to note its connexion both with what has preceded and with what is to follow. Be zealous, the Apostle writes, for the greater gifts, for those which stand higher in the scale rather than for the lower and less noble, however showy and popular the latter may be: e.g. for prophecy rather than for tongues. 'And further I point out a way of life which surpasses' even the best charismata, a way apart from which no gifts of tongues or prophecy or knowledge or faith can avail anything, a way which will endure when all these have had their day and been forgotten, which is greatest even of the three great abiding elements of the spiritual life.' So having placed the permanent gifts of the Spirit in their true relation to the charismata, he returns to the attitude of the Church towards the latter, which was the point that pressed for immediate consideration. While love is to be the great object of pursuit, inferior gifts might be lawfully desired, especially the best of them. Pursue love, yet be zealous for the spiritual gifts, but more than all that you may prophesy. Then follows an instructive comparison of prophecy with the gift of tongues, and rules are laid down for the guidance of the Corinthian Church in the use of both these manifestations of the Spirit. At Corinth as at Thessalonica the Christian prophet scarcely had his due; he was eclipsed by the more attractive glossolalete, and the Apostle labours to reverse the order which the two held in the estimation of the Church. However high the mysteries which the speaker in unknown tongues might utter, he could profit none but himself, unless an interpreter happened to be at hand; whereas the prophet could 'build up' the Church by exhorting and consoling its members, and even winning unbelievers who entered its assemblies. Nevertheless, the Apostle does not either forbid glossolaly, or suffer prophecy to run riot uncontrolled. Both were gifts of the Spirit, and each had its place in the manifestation of spiritual life which was necessary and profitable under the conditions of the Apostolic age. But both must be exercised under proper restraints.

The glossolaleté may not speak in the congregation unless an interpreter is at hand, nor may he use his gift in the ministry of public prayers or Eucharist. Not more than two or three glossolaletes or prophets may claim a hearing at the same assembly, and a prophet who is speaking must be ready to give way to another who believes himself to have received a revelation. By such rules St Paul endeavours to check the disorders threatened by an unbridled licence in the public use of the charismata. Further, he lays down the important principle that *prophets' spirits are under prophets' control*¹, i.e. in Christian prophecy the reason and will are not overpowered by spiritual influences, but the prophet is left master of his own powers, and is therefore responsible for their use. If he abuses his gift, or if he is a mere pretender or is under influences which are not those of the Spirit of God, there is another gift, the 'discerning of spirits,' by which he can be called to account⁵; and this also, it seems, was to be exercised, doubtless under proper safeguards, by the prophets whose turn it was to listen. A free criticism of prophetic utterances by men who were qualified by the possession of the critical spirit is not only permitted but encouraged². No infallibility is claimed for the prophet; the human element which

Part II. iv. is ever mingled with the Divine, the possibility not only of imposture or self-deception, but of imperfections in the delivery of a Divine message through personal vanity or want of balance, is plainly contemplated by the Apostle, notwithstanding his conviction that prophecy itself was a manifestation of the Holy Spirit, and that the prophet ranked next after the Apostle in the order of the charismatic ministry.

From these temporary problems, St Paul passes to the great doctrine of the Resurrection. Here also there is a reference, though indirect and in passing, to the work of the Spirit of Christ. The human body is sown a psychic body, it is raised a spiritual body. If there is a psychic body, there is also a spiritual. So also it is written, The first man, Adam, became (ἐγένετο εἰς) a living soul (ψυχὴν ζῶσαν); the last Adam became a life-giving spirit (πνεῦμα ζωοποιοῦν). But not first the spiritual, but the psychic, and then the spiritual. The student of the Epistle will recall the contrast between the 'psychic' and the spiritual in ch. ii. There, however, two types of men are compared, here two conditions of the human body; our present bodies are psychic, our bodies when raised from the dead will be spiritual. But our present bodies are not psychic in regard to their material; from that point of view they are carnal—σαρκικά or rather σάρκινα. They are 'psychic,' only in so far as they are adapted to the purposes of that lower rational life which St Paul calls the psyche; the passions, affections and emotions of the soul are revealed and work themselves out into act through the body as it now exists. Similarly, the risen body for which we look will be the expression and instrument of the higher spiritual nature which is in us, when that has been developed and matured by the Spirit of God. The Spirit dwells in our mortal bodies, but does not make them 'spiritual'; to the end they will yield themselves readily to the desires of the flesh, and thus express the psyche rather than the pneuma. This will be reversed by the Resurrection. It is reasonable, St Paul argues, to expect that as there is a body adapted to the present visible order, so there is, in God's purpose, a body akin to the spiritual and invisible order. The first man, as we read in Genesis, came to be a living soul, i.e. he was invested with an animal nature, which originally was inbreathed by God, and had affinities with the Supreme Life. But the last Adam, the man in whom at length humanity reached its goal, has passed by the Resurrection into a spiritual existence which has the power to communicate the higher life to the new humanity which He represents. The risen and ascended Christ is not 'psychic' but 'pneumatic'; He is the Heavenly Man, and those who are heavenly¹ ought to wear² the image of the Heavenly in every part of a renewed manhood. Here the Holy Spirit is not directly named; yet if it be asked how the humanity of the

3. The second Epistle to the Corinthians is essentially practical, and while it has passages which are rich in teaching, there is no systematic treatment of the great questions of faith or practice such as are found in the first Epistle. Yet the work of the Spirit in the Christian body comes into view repeatedly, and here and there new lights are cast upon it.

2 Cor. i. 17.

In ch. i. 17 St Paul has occasion to combat a charge of levity to which a change of plans had exposed him. His ministry, he contends, like the Gospel which he preached, was characterized by definiteness, certainty, fixity of purpose and aim.

2 Cor. i. 21.

The position of believers in Christ is 'guaranteed' by God, who anointed us in Baptism with the unction of His Christ², who also sealed us with His own royal seal, and lastly put in our hearts the first instalment of the Spirit (τὸν ἀρραβῶνα τοῦ πνεύματος)³.

³ Ὁ ἀρραβών is properly a deposit paid as a security for the rest of the purchase money; and then, by a natural transference,

Though the Spirit is named only in connexion with the arrhabo, all the metaphors used in this passage describe its workings under different aspects. The gift of the Spirit is at once the unction, the sealing, and the first recompense of faith. As the Spirit anointed Jesus, so it anoints the members of the Christ; as the Son was sealed by the Father, so the adopted sons receive through the Spirit the impress of His character; and the measure of light and power which they already possess in the Spirit is an anticipation of the fulness of spiritual gifts which will be theirs after the resurrection. It may be noted that the last of these metaphors is peculiarly appropriate in a letter addressed to a great mercantile city, where it would be at once understood.

Quite another figure is used in ch. iii. 3. Here the Spirit is the ink with which the Christ writes, when He impresses His mind on the hearts of men in characters which all can read. Ye are being manifested as an epistle of Christ¹, ministered by us, inscribed not with ink², but with the Spirit of the living God; not on stone tables³, but on tables which are hearts of flesh⁴. In the conversion of the Gentiles the part performed by the Apostles was ministerial only; the first believers were their converts in the sense in which St Paul's Epistle to the Romans was written by Tertius¹. It was Christ Himself who was the Author of the great change which had passed over them, and He had wrought it by the Spirit of the Living God, the power which 'alone can order the unruly wills and affections of sinful men.' Not more truly had the Law been written with the Finger of God on the two tables of stone than the New Law had been inscribed by the Spirit on the hearts of those who believed the preaching of the Gospel in the heathen cities of Asia Minor and Greece.

Yet another aspect of the Spirit's work is seen as the chapter proceeds. The reference which has been made to the Tables of the Law suggests a comparison between the Law and the Gospel or, as they are here called, the Old Covenant and the New. [God] made us sufficient to be ministers² of a new covenant³, not of letter but of spirit⁴, for the letter kills but the spirit gives life. The Old Covenant offered a written code of duty, the New Covenant dispenses spiritual life; the code kills hope and love, the Spirit quickens what is ready to die. If the Old Covenant had its splendours, ὡς shall not the ministry of the Spirit be more in glory? for if the ministry of condemnation is glory, how much more does the ministry of righteousness surpass in glory!...For if that which passes away was with glory, much more is that which abides in glory. The religion of the Spirit, the religion which brings righteousness, the religion which alone possesses finality, must needs exceed in glory the religion of the Law, which brought condemnation and from its very nature was transitory and propaedeutic. That the Law was not permanent or final had been symbolized by the fading away of the radiance on the face of Moses, which he sought to screen from the eyes of the Israelites by throwing a veil over it¹. This veil remains on the hearts of his followers, for Israel cannot yet see that the Old Covenant has served its end and found its fulfilment in the religion of the Spirit. But whenever the day shall come for Israel to turn to the Lord Christ, the veil will be taken off, even as Moses uncovered his face when he went back into the Divine Presence. With believers, whether Jews or Greeks (ἡμεῖς πάντες), this time has already come; they enter the Presence with unveiled face, and reflecting as on the burnished brass of a mirror the glory of the ascended Lord, they are by degrees transfigured into His image as from a Lord who is spirit. The last words have caused much difficulty, and, as a matter of grammar, may doubtless be variously rendered. But in view of Part II. iv. I Cor. xv. 45—49 the explanation which has just been given seems to be probable. The transforming process by which Christians are made to wear the image of the Heavenly comes direct from the glorified Lord, whose humanity is now quickening spirit, instinct with the powers of the Spirit of life.

Some incidental references to the work of the Spirit which occur in the course of the Epistle may be briefly noticed here. In ch. vi. the Apostle marshals the evidences of a ministry which is truly of God, and midway among these he places its relation to the Holy Spirit: in everything commending ourselves as God's ministers...in purity, in knowledge, in longsuffering, in kindness, in Holy Spirit, in unfeigned love, in word of truth, in power of God. It is surprising at first sight that the Holy Spirit should be placed thus in the midst of its gifts: a modern writer would surely have named it either first or last according as he thought of purity, knowledge and the rest as emanating from the Spirit or culminating in it. But St Paul is as far as possible from the conventionalities of the professed theologian; he writes, especially in this Epistle, as the words offer themselves, with the freedom of the informal letter which pays little regard to the logical requirements of the sentence. Moreover it is not the person of the Spirit but the gift that is intended, and the gift with special reference to the holiness which it brings (ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ); so that 'Holy Spirit' here is nearly equivalent to the spirit of holiness which ought to be the central feature of the ministerial character, the spirit which is common to all true ministers of God, distinguishing them from false apostles. Walked we not—Titus and I—(St Paul appeals) in the same spirit? in the same steps? It was a different (ἕτερον) spirit which animated pretenders to apostleship (ψευδαπόστολοι), whatever their claims to sanctity might be, and which they imparted to those who followed them; even as the Jesus whom they preached was another (ἄλλον) than the Person preached by St Paul.

The Epistle ends with a benediction which is fuller than St Paul's usual form, and trinitarian in character. His two letters to the Thessalonians and the first of his letters to the Corinthians are concluded by a simple commendation to the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and these words are found at the end of his later letters to the Churches—Galatians, Romans (xvi. 20), Ephesians, Colossians. But at the end of 2 Corinthians the parting prayer is extended in two directions. On the one hand it includes *the love of God*¹, which is the ultimate source of all Divine blessings; and on the other the fellowship of the Holy Spirit, by which the Father's love and the grace of the Son are brought down into the hearts of men. This fellowship or joint participation (κοινωνία) is that which the Holy Spirit effectuates by uniting the human spirit to God in Christ and in Christ and in God to other human spirits which are partakers of the same Spirit. Such

In an epistle which is full of the jarring notes of discord, there is fitness in closing words which speak of the blessing of a fellowship which rests on the grace of Christ and the love of God. Only with some reserve can words written with such a purpose be used for the purpose of establishing a doctrine. Nothing could have been further from the thought of St Paul than to formulate dogma. Yet the manner in which this Apostolic benediction brings together the Father, the Son, and the Spirit in Their relation to the Church suggests beyond a doubt that beneath the religious life of the Apostolic age there lay a profound though as yet unformulated faith in the tripersonality of God.

THE Epistle to the Galatian Churches and the Epistle to the Romans are addressed to widely different communities in circumstances partly similar. The first went to central Asia Minor, the second to Italy; the first appealed to provincials, the second to a cosmopolitan Church at the heart of the Empire. On the other hand both Epistles arose out of the same great questions of faith and life which were raised by the conflict of Pauline Christianity with the Judaizing movement in the Churches. But while in Galatia this controversy was at its height and assumed the form of a personal struggle between the Apostle and the Judaizers, at Rome it was as yet inchoate, or perhaps had scarcely begun, and personal considerations did not enter. Moreover, the wider outlook of the Church of the metropolis afforded an opportunity for a more systematic exposition of the Gospel of St Paul than the Galatians were prepared to receive. For these reasons we shall find in these two Epistles, together with striking coincidences, a marked difference of general treatment. We begin with Galatians, which will naturally precede Romans, not only on chronological grounds, but as presenting St Paul's teaching in a less mature or at least a less fully reasoned form.

Part II, v.

Gal. iii. 2 ff.

I. In Galatians the work of the Spirit first comes into view in ch. iii., where the Apostle uses the fact that the Spirit had been given through his ministry as an argument in favour of the Gospel that he preached. This only would I learn from you: From works of law received ye the Spirit, or from hearing of faith? Are you so void of understanding? Having begun with spirit are you now being perfected by flesh?...He therefore who supplies to you the Spirit and works miracles (δυνάμεις) among you, is it from works of law or from hearing of faith that he proceeds? The appeal is a two-fold one; it points in the first place to the original bestowal of the Spirit at the baptism of the Galatians (ἐλάβετε τὸ πνεῦμα), and secondly to the continued supply of the Spirit and of the miraculous gifts of the Spirit vouchsafed through the hands of those who carried on St Paul's work among them. Had the Judaizing teachers anything of this kind to shew? Could they point to any spiritual results which followed their ministration of legal ordinances? And would men who knew from their own experience what spiritual powers meant be content to enter on the down-grade road of external rites, to descend from the spiritual to the material, and after such an initiation into their new life (ἐναρξάμενοι πνεύματι) seek to consummate it by a carnal ordinance (σαρκὶ ἐπιτελεῖσθε)? Was it not pure folly to reverse the true order of progress—to go from spirit to flesh, not from flesh to spirit? Was it possible to do this in the face of present facts? The Spirit was still given before their eyes; signs of Divine power were daily witnessed. But in no instance as the result of legal teaching or of compliance with it (ἐξ ἔργων νόμου); only as following the message of the Gospel apprehended by faith on the part of the hearers (ἐξ ἀκοῆς πίστεως). Part II. v.

Such an argumentum ad hominem might well have given pause to the keenest partizan on the side of the legalists. But the Apostle presses his advantage further. How were the facts to which reference had been made to be interpreted? Why was the Spirit given only through the preaching of St Paul and of those who followed in his steps? Why had the Judaizers uniformly failed to shew any similar effects of their mission? It was because the one party in this controversy had followed and the others had refused God's way of righteousness. Abraham believed God and was justified by his faith. In Abraham all the nations of the world were to be blessed. How? By sharing his faith and thus sharing his righteousness. It is not the Law which will bring righteousness to the Gentile world, but faith in the promise of God. The promise of God to mankind appeals to the trust, the loyalty, the self-surrender of the human heart; where these are given, the promise fulfils itself. It fulfils itself in the gift of the Spirit, which is the immediate consequence of believing in Jesus Christ and being incorporated into His Body, the Church. Thus it is through faith that the Spirit is received, and not through legal rites. Gal. iii. 7-9.

Gentiles who believed were therefore the true sons of Abraham, since they inherited Abraham's faith. But they were more; they were sons of God. In Baptism they had put on Christ, i.e. they had been invested with Christ's character and sonship. Two recent Divine missions had made this possible. God sent forth¹ his Son made of woman, made under law, that he might redeem those under law, that we might receive the adoption. And because you are sons, God sent forth¹ the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father. The purpose of the Son's mission was to give the rights of sonship; the purpose of the Spirit's mission, to give the power of using them. As the former was realized in human history at the moment of the Incarnation, so the latter connects itself historically with the moment of the Pentecostal coming. But in view of his readers' experience, St Paul prefers to think of the mission of the Spirit as having taken effect when He entered each individual life² at Baptism or the Laying on of Hands. Further, the Apostle is led by his line of thought to speak of the Spirit as the Spirit of the Son. The Spirit of the Only-Begotten Son is sent into the hearts of the adopted sons, because it is the very Spirit of sonship. It does not make them sons, for they are such by their union with the Incarnate Son, but it makes them conscious of their sonship and capable of fulfilling their responsibilities. It enters the heart, the centre of the moral and intellectual nature of every baptized member of Christ and child of God, and its voice is heard within, acclaiming God as the Father of the personal life, *crying, Abba Father*¹! The words which are uttered belong to the human subject and not to the Divine Spirit, and when they appear again in Rom. viii. 15, this is made evident by a verbal change in the phrase with which they are introduced; in the later Epistle it stands *in which we cry*². But crying in Galatians has its own truth to teach; the Spirit of God inspires the cry which the human spirit utters. The bilingual form of the cry is worthy of notice, whether we regard it as a reminiscence of words actually used by our Lord in Gethsemane, or suppose the Marcan Ἀββὰ ὁ πατήρ to reflect the liturgical use of the early Church of Jerusalem. In the former case it will suggest that the adopted children of God reveal their sonship in the same spirit of filial submission which marked the Only Son; in either case, it points to the meeting of Jew and Gentile, men of Aramaic and men of Greek speaking lands, in the Divine Family of the Church³. Both Jewish and Gentile Christians possess in Christ the right to call God Father, and the Spirit voices

Part II. v. this common claim in the hearts of all, and thus gives effect to the Son's redemptive work. That all believers have the right to say 'Our Father' comes from the Incarnate Son; that, having the right, they have also the strong desire to use the privilege of sons, comes from the indwelling in their hearts of the Spirit of the Son. Without the mission of the Spirit the mission of the Son would have been fruitless; without the mission of the Son the Spirit could not have been sent. In order of time the mission of the Son preceded the mission of the Spirit, since adoption, the fruit of redemption, must precede the awakening of the filial spirit. But the two are alike necessary, and the Divine Love which gave the Son and the adoption of sons has included in the gift the Spirit of the Son which is its proper complement.

Gal. iv. 29. A group of passages follows in which the contrast between Spirit and Flesh, already suggested in ch. iii., is worked out in detail. It appears in ch. iv. in connexion with an allegorical treatment of the story of Ishmael and Isaac. The two sons of faithful Abraham are taken to represent the contending parties in the Churches of Galatia; the Judaizers are the children of the slave girl Hagar, while those who looked to be justified by faith are children of the free woman and true wife, Sarah. We, brethren (the Apostle proceeds), after the manner of Isaac are children of promise; but as then the son born after the flesh persecuted the son born after the Spirit, even so it is now. As Ishmael, who came into the world in the way of natural generation (κατὰ σάρκα), derided Sarah's son who was the child of promise and born out of the course of nature, so the more spiritual members of the Galatian congregations must expect to encounter the hard speeches of the legalists. There is a play here upon words; 'after the flesh,' 'after the Spirit' bear a sense in reference to Ishmael and Isaac which must be modified when they are applied to the Judaizers and the Pauline Christians of Galatia. In the latter case 'after the flesh' means 'in the way of a carnal, external ordinance,' and 'after the Spirit,' in the way of spiritual regeneration. Much the same meaning must be attached to πνεύματι in ch. v. 5: *we (ἡμεῖς)*¹ by spirit from faith wait for hope of righteousness—a strangely compressed sentence which appears to mean: 'our hope of final acceptance, which rests upon the basis of faith, is spiritually generated and maintained; it belongs to the higher life of man in which the Spirit of God itself operates upon the human spirit and inspires it with the hope which is founded on faith.' A little further down, at v. 16, 'by spirit' (πνεύματι) occurs again, and from this point the contrast between spirit and flesh is carried forward far into ch. vi. The whole passage is of great interest, and portions of it must be examined here at some length.

But I say, Walk by spirit and you shall not fulfil fleshly lust (ἐπιθυμίαν σαρκός). For the flesh

Part II. v. lusts against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh; for these are opposed to one another, that whatsoever things you would, these you may not do. But if you are led by spirit, you are not under Law.

The antagonism between Flesh and Spirit is now seen to be far more radical than has hitherto appeared. Not only does the flesh stand for the external and natural, and the spirit for the internal and Godward; but the former is the sphere of sinful lusts, while the latter is the champion of the better life, leading men to battle with their lusts. The two are thus diametrically opposed, and men have to choose between them; for they cannot do simply what they please, but must take part in the contest under the leadership of one or of the other. When the Spirit leads a man, he walks by spirit (πνεύματι περιπατεῖν, στοιχεῖν): there is movement and progress in his life as step after step he follows the straight line of the Spirit's rule, each moment bringing him nearer to the goal. In so far as this is so he is not under law; the external command or prohibition is gradually superseded by the growing agreement of his ideals and conduct with the purpose of the highest law, until its control over him ceases altogether because its end has been attained.

Gal. v. 16 ff. But what is to be understood by the flesh and the spirit? The Apostle does not define either, but he gives a detailed account of the effects they severally produce. The flesh proceeds by way of uncontrolled desire (ἐπιθυμία σαρκός) to overt acts of sin. Such acts in great variety met the eye in every Greek city; it was impossible to overlook or mistake them. Manifest are the works of the flesh, such as are fornication, impurity, lasciviousness, idol-worship, witchcraft, enmities, strifes, rivalries, fits of passion, factions, divisions, selfwilled partizanships, envious tempers, drinking bouts, revels, and the like to these. For these things no place would be found in the Kingdom of God. But there was another order which was already at work in human society and was bearing goodly and lasting fruit. The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, graciousness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-restraint; against such things there is no law: law as a prohibitory or condemning power has no existence (οὐκ ἔστω) where they are found. 'Fruit' is doubly a contrast to 'works.' Fruit-bearing is a natural and not a mechanical process, revealing the presence of an inner life; and the use of the singular (καρπός, not καρποί) points to the unity of the character which the Spirit creates. But its unity is manifold, and the nine products enumerated correspond to three sides of the manifold Christian experience; some find their sphere in that inner life which is privy to God and the individual consciousness¹, some in the life of fellowship with men², and some again in the personal character which interprets itself in the words and deeds³ or even in the face⁴ and the manner of the man. Part II. v. Spirit—here the Holy Spirit in His operations, rather than the spiritual life which He creates in believers—bears fruit in every region of human life. All in life that is worthy of the name of fruit—all that fulfils the end of life by bringing glory to God—is of the Spirit. By the Spirit the True Vine abides in the branches and the branches abide in the Vine, apart from which they can do nothing, in union with which they bear ‘much fruit¹.’ By the Spirit² we live, i.e. receive and maintain our spiritual life, our very existence in the higher possibilities of our nature; by the Spirit we may also take step after step along the way of life (εἰ ζῶμεν πνεύματι, πνεύματι καὶ στοιχῶμεν). Thus in v. 26 the Apostle returns to the practical rule with which he set out in v. 16.

Gal. vi. 1. A particular instance follows of the influence of the Spirit upon daily life. Even if (ἐὰν καί) a man be surprised in some trespass, you, the spiritual members of the Church, restore one that is such in a spirit of meekness. True spirituality shews itself in yielding the fruit of the Spirit, for which opportunities are given in intercourse with other members of the Body of Christ. It is by the regular discharge in the Spirit of Christ of the duties that arise from the relations of the present life that Christians are trained for their future life with God. Whatsoever a man has sown, that shall he also reap; for he that sows to his own (ἑαυτοῦ) flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption, whereas he that sows to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap eternal life. To sow to a man's own flesh is to live for the gratification of his lower nature; to sow to the Spirit¹ is to follow the higher intuitions which come from the Holy Spirit in the heart. From the former course of action there results the decay of all that is best in human nature, and at length the utter corruption of the dead soul; from the latter, the quickening and ripening of a character which, when it has been matured, will be the lasting possession of those who have cultivated it during the present life. Life in the Spirit is eternal life sown and growing to maturity; eternal life is life in the Spirit matured and harvested in the Kingdom of God.

² πνεύματι. Lightfoot prefers ‘to the Spirit,’ comparing Rom. vi. 2, xiv. 6, 2 Cor. v. 15. But this involves the use of the dative in two senses within the same short sentence, for he translates the second πνεύματι ‘by the Spirit.’

Part II. v. than in Galatians ; there are casual references to it throughout the Epistle, but nothing like a systematic treatment of the subject is attempted except in ch. viii. That chapter, however, carries the teaching of the Galatian Epistle some way further, and places St Paul's conception of the work of the Spirit in a new and highly interesting light, by bringing out its connexion with his soteriology.

Rom. i. 3f. The antithesis according to flesh, according to spirit, appears at the very beginning of the Epistle to the Romans, but in reference to the Incarnation and Resurrection of Christ, who was made of the seed of David according to the flesh ; who was declared¹ Son of God in power according to the spirit of holiness by (ἐξ) resurrection from the dead. Jesus Christ became son of David by a generation which though, as the Church now knows, it was mediated by the Holy Spirit, in every other respect followed the course of nature (κατὰ σάρκα)². But notwithstanding His truly human birth, He was Son of God, and His Divine sonship was vindicated by an event which did not belong to the natural order of things but was due to supernatural and spiritual forces (κατὰ πνεῦμα), even to that *spirit of holiness*³ which characterized His whole life, and triumphed over death⁴.

³ I.e. the spirit whose note was holiness.

⁴ Cf. Rom. viii. 11 τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ ἐγείραντος τὸν Ἰησοῦν.

In ch. i. 11 there is a passing reference to the spiritual gifts imparted by the ministry of the Apostle. But it is in ch. v. that the ethical work of the Spirit first comes into view as a consequence of our Lord's work of redemption and justification. The passage occurs at the end of the great argument which establishes justification on the basis of faith. Jesus Christ was raised because of our justification. Therefore being justified on the ground of faith let us have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ...and let us rejoice in hope of the glory of God...Let us also rejoice in our tribulations, knowing that tribulation works endurance, and endurance probation, and probation hope, and hope does not put to shame. Of this we are confident, because the love of God has been poured out in our hearts through Holy Spirit that was given to us. 'Since the day (the Apostle would say) when the Spirit was given to each of us¹, there has been perpetually in our hearts the sense of God's love to us in His Son, poured out upon them by the Spirit which was then received.' Here the Spirit is regarded as the source of Christian experience in so far as it realizes the Divine Love of redemption. It is due to the Spirit that the love of God is to believers not a mere doctrine, but a fact of their inner life, continually present to their consciousness, and inspiring a certain hope of future blessedness.

The seventh chapter strikes the keynote of 'spirit' versus 'flesh' which dominated the closing chapters of Galatians. When we were in the flesh the passions of our sins, which were through the Law, were active in our members. But as things now are (νυνὶ δέ), we are discharged from the Law, our old relations with the Law are broken off...so that we may serve in newness of spirit and not in oldness of written ordinance. 'Not that the Law is itself the cause of sin or death, or a mere written form; on the contrary, it is spiritual in its purpose and requirements. It is I, the human ego, that am fleshly (σάρκινος) and therefore the slave of sin. In me, at least in my flesh, in my lower nature, good does not dwell; if my higher self, my rational nature (ὁ νοῦς), consents to the Divine Law—video meliora proboque—my lower self is from time to time taken captive by the law of Sin, a ruling power which resides in the body and uses its members as its instruments. Thus in my one personality (αὐτὸς ἐγώ) I am divided between two masters, my mind serving the law of God, my flesh the law of Sin. So miserable (ταλαίπωρος ἐγὼ ἄνθρωπος) is my condition apart from Christ.'

Rom. vii.
14 ff.Rom. vii.

But all is changed when Christ enters the field of human life and is received by faith. The law of Sin and Death is now vanquished by a new and stronger principle, the law of the Spirit of life in Christ. What is the history of this new force in human life? It begins with the mission of the Son of God, who took the likeness of flesh of sin, i.e.

flesh such as ours in every respect except its sin, and in this flesh, this visible bodily nature, exposed to all the temptations which beset such a nature, condemned sin and put it to death by dying to it, and by this victory of a true humanity over sin opened the way for the attainment by men in the flesh of the righteousness which the Law demands (τὸ δικάϊωμα τοῦ νόμου), but has hitherto demanded in vain. For the victory of Christ has not only a negative, but a positive result; on the one hand it has destroyed the power of the principle of Sin, on the other it has brought to us through the Resurrection the power of the Spirit of Christ. This new power dominates those who yield themselves to it and walk not according to flesh but according to spirit. To them the higher nature of man, which even in the heathen is on the side of righteousness, no longer resists the impulses of the flesh unaided and suffers hopeless defeat, but is reinforced by the Spirit, which leads it to victory. Thus we are brought back to the struggle between flesh and spirit. But though the conflict is the same which is described in Galatians, the treatment is entirely fresh and goes more deeply into the heart of the matter. For those who are according to flesh set their minds upon the things of the flesh, but those who are according to spirit, upon the things of the Spirit. For the mind set upon the flesh is death, but the mind set upon the Spirit is life and peace; because the mind set upon the flesh is hostility towards God, for it is not in a state of subjection to the law of God (for

Part II. v. neither can it be), but those who are in flesh cannot please God.

The argument is not easy to grasp, but it seems to be as follows. 'I spoke of the attainment of righteousness by those who walk after spirit and not after flesh. For there are two opposite conditions of mind, that in which men's thoughts and affections are centred on the life of sense, and that in which they find their satisfaction in things that are spiritual and eternal. And these two states cannot lead to the same end, for the one is a state of spiritual death and the other is life and peace, the life of the Spirit and the peace of God, which comes from union with Christ. The mind which is dominated by the flesh cannot please God or fulfil the law of righteousness, for it habitually resists the Divine Will and is, openly or secretly, consciously or unconsciously, the enemy of God¹.'

But you² (the Apostle continues) are not in flesh but in spirit, if the Spirit of God really (εἴπερ) dwells in you. But if any has not Christ's Spirit, that man is not his. If, however, Christ is in you, the body indeed is dead because of sin, but the spirit is life because of righteousness. But if the Spirit of him who raised Jesus from the dead dwells in you, he who raised Christ Jesus from the dead shall quicken even your mortal bodies because of his Spirit that dwells in you.

² Emphatic: 'You who walk after the Spirit, in whom the Spirit dwells.'

In other words : 'You, Roman believers, are not in the condition of those whose affections are set upon the flesh ; you are "in spirit"¹, in a state of spiritual activity, if the Spirit of God does in very truth dwell in you, as indeed He does if you are members of Christ ; for the man who has not Christ's Spirit, which is the Spirit of God, is not Christ's. Christ is in all His members by His Spirit. But if Christ is in you, the life of righteousness has begun in your human spirit, quickened by the Spirit of God. For the time, indeed, the new life does not shew itself in the body, which is still dead² because it is the seat of sin. But the body, too, must eventually yield to the law of the spirit of life ; as Jesus Himself was raised according to the spirit of holiness, so will the Spirit of God which dwells in you bring about the same result.' If we accept the Alexandrian reading (διὰ τοῦ ἐνοικοῦντος πνεύματος³) the Spirit is the Agent—if the 'Western' reading (διὰ τὸ ἐνοικοῦν πνεῦμα⁴), He is the Cause, of the resurrection of the body. In either case the effect is due to the indwelling of the Spirit, and not to a power working ab extra ; there is no resurrection after the likeness of Christ's Resurrection except for those who already are alive in spirit through the Part II. v. immanent presence of the Spirit of God and of Christ.

Even in this most systematic of his Epistles St Paul repeatedly pauses to point the moral of his argument. So he does here. The indwelling of the Spirit lays the believer under an obligation which must be discharged by living as the Spirit directs.

For you received not a spirit of slavery, leading you again to fear, but you received a spirit of adoption, in which we cry¹, 'Abba, Father'; the Spirit bears witness jointly with our own spirit that we are God's children (τέκνα). As the slave is marked by the slavish spirit, so the filial spirit is the sure sign of sonship. But the Spirit received at baptism is a filial Spirit; it inspires the daily Pater noster of the Church; in those who are led by it, it is a joint-witness with their own consciousness that they possess the nature as well as the rights of* sons¹. There is no return in their case to the state of fear² in which they lived under the Law, for they know God to be their Father, and themselves His accepted sons. More than this, they know themselves to be His heirs. *But if we are children, we are also heirs, heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ, if in truth we suffer jointly with him, that we may also be jointly glorified*³. As the only begotten Son is *the Heir*⁴, the adopted and regenerated children are also heirs, but on the condition that they share the sufferings of the Son. Present suffering, if borne in fellowship with Christ, is so far from casting a doubt upon the reality of our sonship that it lies on the direct road to its realization in the glory of the children of God. All nature suffers in this imperfect state, and its sufferings extend even to those who are under the law of the Spirit of life. We ourselves also, though we have the firstfruits of the Spirit—we ourselves also groan within ourselves, waiting for adoption, namely the emancipation of our body. For adoption has been as yet received only in part; the Spirit in us is but the firstfruits of the great harvest of spiritual life; our emancipation is incomplete, for the body is still subject to death and the instrument of sin. ‘First-

Part II. v. fruits' (ἀπαρχή) applied to the Spirit in believers recalls St Paul's use of 'first instalment' (ἀρραβών) in 2 Cor. i. 22, v. 5. The present metaphor is drawn from the ceremonial of the Passover, the other from the mercantile life of the Greek towns; while the latter was specially appropriate in a letter to Corinth, the former would appeal to the large Jewish element in the Church at Rome. Both yield the same general sense. The spiritual life already imparted to the Church is inchoate, and cannot be perfected until the body has been set free from the law of sin and death. When at length the body has been emancipated and made 'spiritual,' the adoption will be complete. The firstfruits will be merged in the harvest, the first instalment in the full inheritance of the sons of God.

Yet one further contribution is made by this great chapter to St Paul's doctrine of the Spirit. He has spoken of the groans of suffering Nature being shared by the half-emancipated children of God. Meanwhile, however, we are not left without effective help in our struggle with sin and death. In like manner also the Spirit supports our weakness; for what we should pray so as to pray as we ought we know not, but the Spirit itself entreats for us with groans which are not to be expressed in words. But he who searches the hearts of men knows what is the mind¹ of the Spirit, because it is in accordance with the will of God² that he entreats for saints. The very Spirit of God within us bears His part¹ in our present difficulties. As He cries in us and we in Him Abba, Father, so He shares the groans of our imperfect nature, converting them into prayers without and beyond words. There are times when we cannot pray in words, or pray as we ought; but our inarticulate longings for a better life are the Spirit's intercessions on our behalf, audible to God who searches all hearts, and intelligible and acceptable to Him since they are the voice of His Spirit, and it is according to His will that the Spirit should intercede for the members of His Son.

There is perhaps nothing in the whole range of New Testament Pneumatology which carries us so far into the heart of the Spirit's work. He is seen here in His most intimate relations with the human consciousness, distinct from it, yet associated with its imperfectly formed longings after righteousness, acting as an intercessor on its behalf in the sight of God, as the glorified Christ does²; not however in heaven, but in the hearts of believers. The mystery of prayer stands here revealed, as far as it can be in this life; we see that it is the Holy Spirit who not only inspires the filial spirit which is the necessary condition of prayer, but is the author of the 'heartly desires' which are its essence.

- Part II. v. Here the systematic teaching of Romans ends ; but the second half of the Epistle yields several incidental notices of the place which the Holy Spirit fills in the Christian life. If the members of Christ's
- Rom. xii. 11. body are *fervent in spirit*¹, it is because the fire of the Spirit has raised their natural lukewarmness to the boiling heat of a great enthusiasm. If they are distinguished by a joyous spirit which triumphs over circumstances however adverse, it is because the Kingdom of God which the Christ came to establish upon earth *is righteousness and peace, and joy in Holy Spirit*²; if they abound in hope, it is in the power of Holy Spirit; if the Apostle would appeal to the sympathy of men, most of whom were personally unknown to him, he beseeches them by the love of the Spirit, that brotherly love which the one Spirit implants in all Christian hearts. In the mission work of the Church there was no less need and there had been no less evidence of the Spirit's presence. To the Spirit, in fact, was due the conversion of the Gentiles; St Paul had received a special gift of Divine grace in virtue of which he was the ministering priest of Jesus Christ for the Gentiles, doing the sacrificial work of the Gospel of God by offering up the Gentile Churches³. But he

All that the great Apostle had done at the time when this Epistle was written—and it came at the end of his missionary journeys, when he had practically finished his evangelistic work in Asia Minor and Greece—had been wrought by Christ through his hands *in the power of the Spirit*¹. The greatest of Christian missionaries realized that his power lay not in himself but in the Spirit of Christ, who used him as the instrument of His grace.

Part II. vi.

It is characteristic of St Paul that he does not return, except incidentally or for a practical purpose, to a subject which he has treated at any length in a particular Epistle or group of Epistles. Thus the doctrine of Justification by Faith, which is laboured in the Epistles to the Galatians and Romans, reappears but twice¹ in the later letters. In like manner the doctrine of the Spirit, also treated in those Epistles, does not again come on for discussion. But the work of the Holy Spirit enters so largely into the life of the Church, and held so great a place in the thought of the first age, that no Apostolic letter to the Churches could ignore it altogether; and references to it will be found in all the Epistles attributed to St Paul with the exception of the short private letter to Philemon.

1. The long imprisonment at Rome was to St Paul in some respects a season of leisure and even of liberty. He was free to think, to write, to teach, and to preach²; and the enforced confinement to hired lodgings offered opportunities for these employments, especially for the two former, which could rarely have been found during the years of travel and active work that preceded his arrest. It would be surprising if no letters to the Churches had been written in this interval, and those which have reached us, the Epistles to the Philippians and Colossians, and the encyclical to the Churches of Asia which is known as the Epistle to the Ephesians¹, bear the stamp of St Paul's mind and heart too plainly to be attributed to a mere imitator of the great Apostle. Part II. vi.

For our present purpose we will take these three Epistles in the order already given. It is probably the chronological order², and it will have the advantage of keeping to the last the most important references to our subject in this group of letters.

(a) At Rome St Paul's vigorous personality had roused the zeal of other preachers of the Gospel, some of whom preached a Gospel which was not his, and preached it in a spirit of partizanship, and even with the malicious hope of adding bitterness to the prisoner's lot. Yet he rejoiced in this state of things; the name of Christ was proclaimed even by those whose purpose was to hurt His Apostle; and the very pain which their malice caused would help on the Apostle's own highest interests. For I know (he writes to the Philippians) that this shall turn to me for salvation³ through your supplication and supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ. The prayers of the Philippian Church and the supply of the Spirit to St Paul in his lodgings at Rome are so closely correlated that in the Greek one article Phil. i. 19.

³ Cf. Lc. xxi. 13 ἀποβήσεται ὑμῖν εἰς μαρτυρίαν.

Part II. vi. suffices for the two (διὰ τῆς ὑμῶν δεήσεως καὶ ἐπιχορηγίας). Writing to the Galatians four or five years before, St Paul had spoken of the Spirit as 'supplied' through the ministry of the Church¹. Now he traces his own supply of the Spirit to the prayer of the Church. He was confident that, as his converts prayed, a fresh abundance of the Spirit which was in Jesus Christ and had been sent by Him² would be poured into his heart, making for his final salvation whether the present captivity should result in life or in death.

Phil. i. 27
-ii. 2. In the next passage St Paul's thoughts are turned to the Philippians themselves. They also had need of the Spirit of Jesus Christ, but for other reasons. Against the persecutor they had shewn a firm front ; they had learned not only to believe on Christ, but to suffer for Him. Yet there was evidently among them, though in a less developed form than among the Corinthians, the spirit of dissension and division. They needed not only to resist the enemy, but to resist him with a united front ; to stand firm in one spirit, with one soul striving in concert for the faith of the Gospel. The Apostle presently returns to this point, which he knows to be vital. If then there is any exhortation (παράκλησις) in Christ, if any consolation of love,

² πνεῦμα Ἰησοῦ, Acts xvi. 7 ; πνεῦμα Χριστοῦ, Rom. viii. 9, 1 Pet. i. 11.

if any fellowship of spirit, if any feelings of tenderness and mercy, complete my joy that you be of the same mind, having the same love, being of one soul, setting your minds on the one thing. I.e. 'if you can be moved by an appeal based on your Christian faith or by the persuasiveness of the love it inspires or by that common life in the Spirit which you share with your brethren or by the stirrings within you of God's own character of tender mercy, by all these I entreat you to let nothing disturb your harmony or divide you from one another; thus you will fill my cup with joy¹.' Here the Apostle returns to a phrase which he had used in an earlier Epistle; the 'fellowship of the Holy Spirit' has met us already in 2 Corinthians, where it is associated in the parting benediction with the 'grace of our Lord Jesus Christ' and the 'love of God.' There the personal Spirit of God is directly in view; here perhaps rather the spiritual life which is His work in believers. But 'fellowship of spirit' is more than oneness of spirit; it is that joint participation in the Spirit's gifts and powers which was in the Apostolic Church the acknowledged bond of unity and communion between the baptized.

One more reference to the Spirit occurs in this Epistle. In ch. iii. 2 ff. the Apostle warns the Philippians in no measured language against his old adversaries, the Judaizing party, who were seeking to undermine his work at Rome and were perhaps

Part II. vi.

¹ The Apostle had already causes for rejoicing in his bonds (i. 18); this would make his cup full.

Part II. vi. not wholly unknown at Philippi¹. Beware of the 'dogs'², beware of the 'evil workers,' beware of the 'Mutilation.' For we³ are the 'Circumcision,' who serve by God's Spirit, and glory in Christ Jesus, and have not put our trust in the flesh. Circumcision, considered as a mere rite, is simple mutilation; the true circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit and not in the letter⁴. Spiritual Christians, therefore, are 'the Circumcision,' for it is in them that the rite finds its fulfilment. Such are Israelites indeed, who with circumcised hearts render the spiritual service which only the Divine Spirit can inspire. The thought is in general the same as in Jo. iv. 23 f., Rom. i. 9⁵, where the human spirit is in view; but in Philippians, if we accept the reading which has the best support⁶, the Spirit of God is specifically mentioned as the power by which the human spirit is enabled to worship in spirit and in truth.

¹ It is unexpected to find a reference to the Judaizers in an Epistle addressed to a city where there was not even a synagogue. But St Paul's steps seem to have been dogged everywhere by the Pharisaic party, and the fame of the Philippian Church may well have brought them to Philippi by 59 or 60.

² Lightfoot: "St Paul retorts upon the Judaizers the term of reproach by which they stigmatized the Gentiles as impure." Ἔργαται perhaps hints at their insistence on mere works, κατατομή at their perversion of circumcision, which, as they taught it, was a mere cutting of the flesh, without spiritual significance.

³ ἡμεῖς, emphatic: 'we, and not they, as they claim.'

⁴ Cf. Rom. ii. 29.

⁶ θεοῦ N*ABCD^c: θεῷ N^{ca}D* is 'Western.'

(b) In the Epistle to the Colossians the Apostle's thoughts are carried by a new controversy into another field, and he mentions the Spirit only once. St Paul begins the letter as usual with a sympathetic reference to the proofs of sincerity which the Colossians had given: he had heard of their faith in Christ Jesus and the love which they had towards all their brethren in Christ (i. 4). Such love as Epaphras who knew them well had described could only be in spirit (i. 8); it had its origin in hearts quickened and warmed by the indwelling of the Spirit of Christ. Of love as an evidence of the Spirit's presence we have already heard much in earlier Epistles¹.

Part II. vi.

Col. i. 4—8.

(c) The Epistle to the Ephesians has been suspected because of its frequent coincidences with Colossians. In one important respect, however, it offers a striking contrast to Colossians; it abounds in references to the Holy Spirit. Nor are these references by any means mere recollections of earlier thoughts: some are such, no doubt, but in others a distinct note of progress may be heard, as if the writer were feeling his way to new points of view upon a road which he had but in part explored.

The first mention of the Spirit (i. 13 f.) has many points of resemblance to 2 Cor. i. 22. In whom—the Beloved (v. 3, 6)—having also believed and not only heard the Gospel (v. 13), you Gentiles were sealed with the Spirit of promise, the Holy Spirit, which is an earnest of our inheritance, unto

Part II. vi. the redemption of the possession, to the praise of his glory. Hearing was in the case of the Asian Christians followed by faith in Christ, and faith by the seal of the promised Spirit, which was the consecrating power in the life of believers and the first instalment (ἀρραβών) of their future inheritance, that final emancipation from sin and death of the new Israel, the Possession of God, which will issue in the recognition by all His creatures of the moral glory of God manifested in the completed history of Redemption. In this passage the metaphors of the seal and the earnest are reminiscences of the similar passage in 2 Corinthians, and the 'Spirit of Promise' recalls the promise of the Spirit in Galatians; but the setting is new, and it carries us into regions of thought which are now for the first time connected with the work of the Spirit. We learn what it is that the Spirit as an earnest guarantees, namely, our inheritance in the life to come, and the place it fulfils in the purpose of God, working out the final deliverance of His purchased people from the law of sin and death, and calling forth the last great Te Deum laudamus of angels and men.

Cf. Rom. viii. 17. Cf. Rom. viii. 22. Eph. iv. 30. iv. 30, Grieve not the Spirit, the Holy Spirit, of God, in which¹ you were sealed unto the day of emancipation. Here two of the keywords of ch. i. 13 occur again. Believers in their baptism received the seal of the Spirit with a view to their complete emancipation at a future day. As in 1 Thess. iv. 8 the Apostle finds an argument against the indulgence of sin in an emphatic reference to the holiness of the Divine Gift: 'the Spirit which sealed you is the Holy Spirit, for it is the Spirit of God¹, whose nature recoils from all contact with evil.' The thought of a 'day of emancipation²' adds another motive, placing the present struggle against sin in the light of the day of Christ, which held so large a place in early Christian thought. Lastly, the exhortation not to 'grieve the Spirit' represents the Spirit as personal, identifying it with the Heart of God, as in Isaiah lxiii. 10³. To have received the seal of the Spirit is not only a cause for thankfulness, but a source of increased responsibility. The first instalment of spiritual life which it brings is not an absolute guarantee of final deliverance; it makes for that end, but may be frustrated by the conduct of the person who has received it. 'You were sealed with the Spirit,' the Apostle pleads; 'then do not break the seal⁴.'

Part II. vi.

To return to the first chapter; in v. 17 the Apostle again refers to the Spirit, but with another purpose. 'You are often named in my prayers; I give thanks to God for your faith, but I desire for you yet larger gifts. I pray that God may give you a spirit of wisdom and revelation (ἀποκαλύψεως) in knowledge of him, you having the eyes of your heart enlightened to the end that you may know what is the hope of his calling, what the wealth of the glory of his inheritance...and what the surpassing greatness of his power... The Spirit was given to the Church at the Pentecost, and to each individual at baptism, and the gift is continuous unless it is checked by a course of sin. It is not then for this that St Paul prays, but for a particular endowment of the Spirit, 'a spirit,' i.e. a spiritual influence, productive of a certain type of character or mind. As we read elsewhere in his Epistles of a spirit of meekness (1 Cor. iv. 21), a spirit of faith (2 Cor. iv. 13), a spirit of adoption (Rom. viii. 15), so the Apostle speaks here of a *spirit of wisdom and revelation*¹—the wisdom that apprehends God's will, the revelation that makes Divine mysteries intelligible, by lifting the veil from the heart, so that the glory of the Christian calling with its hope for the future and its promise of strength for the present is disclosed to enlightened eyes. It is not the charismatic word of wisdom (1 Cor. xii. 8), or the power of apocalyptic utterance (1 Cor. xiv. 6) which is here in view, but the inward illumination which is the normal outcome of faith and love. St Paul desires this experience for all his converts. Not all are prophets or seers²; not all see visions or write apocalypses, but all may have their eyes open to see the true meaning of their life in Christ¹. Part II. vi.

In ch. ii. 14 the Apostle strikes another note which is heard at intervals through the next two chapters. The union of Jew and Gentile in the Body of Christ has created a new humanity; a reconciliation has taken place between the two factors which hitherto have been kept apart, in virtue of the reconciliation of both to God by the Cross of Christ. For through him we both have access in one Spirit to the Father. Here the work of the Spirit is seen in its relation to the work of the Son and the love of the Father. 'Access to God' is the first great result of the Atonement, and it comes to men through the mediation of the Son. 'Access' is another word taken over from the Epistle to the Romans (v. 2). There however the Apostle thinks chiefly of the terms of admission to the favour of God, here he contemplates admission to His Presence²; we are on the track of the ideas afterwards worked out in the Epistle to the Hebrews. But St Paul, while he emphasizes the redemptive work of the Son, does not lose sight of its necessary sequel, the guiding, inspiring work of the Spirit; if the Son has opened a new and living way into the Father's

² In this sense it occurs again in Eph. iii. 12.

Part II. vi. Presence, it is the Spirit in whom we cry Abba, Father; in whom our hearts draw nigh. And it is the oneness of the Spirit of access which makes all who draw near to God through Jesus Christ to be one in Him. Jew and Gentile now approach God in one Pater noster, in one Eucharist; they are one Body, nay one man¹, since they have one Spirit. A common spiritual life animates and coordinates the two great sections of the Christian Society.

Eph. iv.

This conception is worked out in detail at the beginning of the fourth chapter. Here the distinction between Jew and Gentile disappears altogether. The Apostle enumerates seven unities which ought to triumph over all the elements of discord that tend to keep believers apart: there is one body and one Spirit...one hope...one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all. But it is the unity of the Spirit on which especial stress is laid, for if this is wanting, the others lose their power to preserve union. An earnest effort therefore must be made (σπουδάζοντες) to keep this unity in the bond (συνδέσμῳ) of peace², i.e. to maintain in the Body of Christ the charity which binds its members into a perfect whole; whatever disturbs the peace of the Church impairs the unity of the Spirit which inhabits the Body. As the commentators point out³, it is not easy to distinguish here between the two senses of 'spirit'; the 'one spirit' may be either the community of thought and feeling, of interest and life, which marks the living organism, or the Divine Spirit through which this community is gained. But if the first meaning is present in the words, it passes insensibly into the second; the 'One Spirit' of v. 4 cannot be divorced from the 'One Lord' and the 'One God and Father' of v. 5. Viewed in connexion with the 'one Body,' it is the spirit of the Church; but it also stands in relation to Christ and to God, and is the very Spirit of Both.

From the unity of the Spirit St Paul passes at once to the manifold gifts of grace which create a diversity of ministries without breaking the harmony of the Body (iv. 7—16). The passage has affinities with 1 Cor. xii. 4—28, Rom. xii. 4 ff., but it has also characteristics which are its own. The gifts are connected with the Ascension of the Christ; the ascended Lord gave them to the world, and their purpose is to perfect the Church in Him. The Spirit is not mentioned here by name, but no reader of St Paul can doubt that His work is throughout in the background of the Apostle's thought¹.

Of the special gifts possessed by St Paul himself and by other apostles and prophets mention has been made at an earlier point in the Epistle (iii. 3, 5), where the Apostle speaks of the stewardship of that grace of God which was given him for the

To a less extent and in a lower region of thought this gift was bestowed on not a few of the non-official members of the Church; it was one of the commoner charismata in the Church at Corinth, and doubtless also in Asia Minor, at the time when this encyclical was sent to the Asian Churches. Another form of 'revelation,' which was possessed by St Paul himself, consisted in ecstatic raptures that seemed to carry the man who was under their influence into Paradise or to disclose to him the person of the glorified Christ. But to these manifestations there is no reference in Ephesians; the high level of thought maintained throughout this Epistle does not lend itself to a reference to the lower charismatic gifts².

The Spirit's work upon the individual life of the ordinary believer receives illustration later in the same chapter (iii. 16) where for the second time the Apostle prays for the Churches addressed.

I bend my knees to the Father...that he may give to you according to the wealth of his glory to be strengthened with power through his Spirit poured into the inner man, that the Christ may dwell through faith in your hearts in love, you being rooted and grounded¹, that you may have full strength to apprehend with all the saints what is the breadth and length and height and depth and to know the knowledge-surpassing love of the Christ, that you may be filled unto all the fulness of God. Though the Spirit is named only at the opening of this great prayer, it is necessary to have the whole before the eye while we attempt to grasp the place which He occupies in the process described. Beginning at the end of the prayer and working back we see that the goal of the Christian life is 'the fulness of God'; that this is reached by the road of a knowledge which surpasses all the intelligence of men, intuitively realizing the love of Christ and apprehending the vastness of the Divine idea of Redemption; that this knowledge comes from the faith by which Christ dwells in the heart, and the love in which the root and foundation of the higher life is laid. For no step in this progress is human nature sufficient; behind it all there lies the strengthening² of the Spiritual strength is the primary and most fundamental need of human nature on its way to God, more fundamental than wisdom and revelation, which are the adornments rather than the essentials of the Christian life.

The inner life is again in view in ch. iv. 23 ff. St Paul's converts had been taught (ἐδιδάχθητε), before their baptism or at an early stage in their baptismal life, to put off, in relation to their former manner of life, the old man...and to be renewed in the spirit of their mind and put on the new man which was created after God in righteousness and holiness of the truth. A new self must take the place of their former self; a self renewed continually in the region of the spiritual life, and like unfallen man, created after the image of God, in the righteousness and holiness which spring from and are in harmony with the truth. The spirit of the mind, where the great change is wrought, is not the Divine Spirit, but it is the sphere of the Holy Spirit's operations, and its renewal and re-creation are due to them. In a later epistle we shall find this connexion explicitly stated¹; here it is implicit only, but scarcely obscure.

ἐκραταιώθη πνεύματι, ii. 40 ἐκραταιοῦτο πληρούμενον σοφία. The present passage is remarkable for bringing together all the words which signify strength or force (δυνάμει...κραταιωθῆναι...ἵνα ἐξισχύσητε).

Two other passages in the Epistle to the Ephesians place the work of the Spirit in relation with the experience of the Christian life. The exhilarating, uplifting, power of the Spirit is contrasted by St Paul with the effect of overmuch wine upon the intemperate. Be not drunken with wine, in which there is excess, but be filled in spirit, speaking one to another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making music with your heart to the Lord. It is of course not the use of wine¹ that is deprecated, but its abuse—a use in which there is excess. Such carousals were too familiar in the Greek cities of Asia Minor², and they were the negation of all spiritual influences³. But if Christians were called to abstain from this shallow mirth, they received immediate compensation; their spirits were filled with the wine of God, their hearts rose under the power of the new Spirit of Christ; and for the drinking songs of heathendom, they had the psalms of the Old Testament and Christian psalms based upon them⁴, the hymns and odes which the Church under the impulses of the Spirit was already beginning to compose⁵. St Paul, however, would not Part II. vi. limit thanksgiving to moments of exhilaration ; in the Spirit all life could be a giving of thanks (v. 20).

Yet life in Christ has another aspect ; it is a warfare with the powers of evil. And in this also the Spirit bears its part, supplying the soldiers of God with their chief weapon of attack and the power to use it. Eph. vi. 17 f. Take...the sword of the Spirit, which is God's word (ρῆμα)¹, with all manner of prayer and supplication praying at every season in spirit. Any utterance of God, whether it comes through a prophet or is addressed directly to the heart, is a sword of the Spirit, through whom it reaches us, to be used for a home-thrust at the powers of evil. But it must be wielded by way of (διά) prayer and supplication, i.e. prayer rising to the fervency of earnest entreaty. Such prayer, in all its forms, is necessary not at some seasons only but at all. Since the enemy is always with us, the sword must be always in the hands of the Christian soldier, and the prayer which gives it effect in his heart. Both are due to the Holy Spirit ; for as it is by the Spirit that God speaks in and to men, so it is by the Spirit that the spirits of men hold communion with God.

2. If the Epistles of the Captivity differ in purpose and tone from St Paul's earlier letters, the Pastoral Epistles are still further removed from them, and it is not difficult to make out a case for the widely accepted view that 1, 2 Timothy and Titus cannot in their present form be attributed to the author of 1 Thessalonians, 1 and 2 Corinthians, Part II. vi.

Galatians, and Romans. But the advocates of the non-Pauline origin of the Pastorals are apt to overlook an important element in the controversy. It is forgotten that a writer of St Paul's versatility and genius must have known how to adapt himself to changed circumstances and a new theme. Certainly the purpose of the Pastorals sufficiently accounts for the absence of theological discussion; if we meet with little or no reference to justification by faith or to the inner life of believers, the purpose of these letters explains this circumstance. Yet even in the Pastoral Epistles Pauline theology is not unrepresented, and in particular they contain several characteristic allusions to St Paul's doctrine of the Spirit.

In 1 Tim. iii. 16 the contrast of flesh and spirit 1 Tim. iii.
16. appears in a famous Christological passage. Great is the Mystery of religion (τῆς εὐσεβείας), who was manifested in flesh, was justified in spirit. The central truth of the Christian Religion is a mystery, a Divine secret, long hidden but now revealed to faith; and this central mystery is the Person¹ who, preexistent and invisible, has been manifested² to men in human form, and whose claim to be the Righteous one was made good in the sphere of the spirit, by the force and elevation of His life and death, by the miracle of His resurrection and

Part II. vi. ascension¹. 'Spirit' is here, as in Rom. i. 4, the human spirit of our Lord, in union with the Divine, and filled with the Holy Spirit which anointed Him for His Messianic work.

Several passages in the Pastoral Epistles speak of the work of the Holy Spirit in the prophetic utterances of the Apostolic Church. Thus in 1 Tim. iv. 1, The Spirit expressly (ῥητῶς) says that in the latter times some shall apostatize from the faith, giving heed to deceiving spirits and teachings of demons, there can be little doubt that a Christian prophecy is cited, whether we have here the very words of an utterance which had impressed itself on the mind of the Church and become a tradition, or only the substance of words such as might often be heard in the churches from members of the prophetic order. Further on in the same chapter (v. 14) Timothy is reminded of the part which the prophetic Spirit had borne in his own ordination: neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee through prophecy with laying on of the hands of the presbytery. The words 'through prophecy' (διὰ προφητείας) are best explained by the reference in ch. i. 18 to the prophecies that led the way to Timothy, i.e. that marked him out for the future companion of St Paul and led to his ordination to that work. It is true that in the Acts no mention is made either of the presence of prophets at Derbe or Lystra at the time when Timothy went forth with St Paul, or of any formal ordination by the presbytery acting in concert with St Paul in the laying on of hands. But the scene described in the Epistles to Timothy accords with the account of a primitive ordination given in Acts xiii. At Derbe as at Antioch the first step may have been taken at the suggestion of a prophet or prophets, who speaking in the Spirit pointed out Timothy as the future colleague of Paul and Silas¹. Paul on his part accepted Timothy²: the elders of the local Church joined with the Apostle in the solemn imposition of hands, and the heavenly spark was imparted which needed only from time to time to be fanned into a flame³.

The nature of this ordination gift is defined in 2 Tim. i. 7. After speaking of the charisma which was in Timothy through the laying on of his hands the Apostle proceeds: for God gave us not a spirit of cowardice, but a spirit of power and love and discipline (σωφρονισμοῦ). The last word is of doubtful interpretation; if it is to be taken intransitively, it will mean a sound mind (A.V.) or rather 'sobriety of mind,' 'self control⁴.' But in the few other instances where σωφρονισμός occurs in literature, it bears the transitive sense 'chastening,' 'discipline⁵,' and this is supported by the use of the

The ministerial spirit, St Paul would say, is not that of the weakling who refrains from speaking the truth because it is distasteful and will provoke resentment, but that of the strong man who can exercise discipline without abandoning love². For discipline there was doubtless frequent occasion in the churches newly gathered from heathenism; and there was no part of the apostle's or the evangelist's work which needed more urgently a special endowment of the Spirit of Christ. Another difficult duty which fell to the lot of the first preachers of the Gospel was to guard the good deposit of Christian truth (2 Tim. i. 14; cf. 1 Tim. vi. 20) against the attacks open or insidious of the false teachers who abounded in the Apostolic age. This also must be done, St Paul is careful to say, through the Holy Spirit which dwells in us. In us may mean 'in all believers'³, but in this context it is more probably 'in you and me, who have been put in trust with the Gospel'⁴ and specially endowed with the Spirit for the fulfilling of our charge.'

Tit. iii. 4. However this may be, there is at least one clear reference in the Pastoral Epistles to the work which the Spirit accomplishes in all the members of Christ. In Tit. iii. 4 ff., a passage full of Pauline ideas, we

¹ The construction is ambiguous. Πνεύματος ἁγίου is the genitive of the agent and qualifies ἀνακαινώσεως, but it remains uncertain whether ἀνακαινώσεως depends on διά or on λουτροῦ, i.e. whether regeneration and renewal are regarded as two separate acts or processes, or are both sacramentally included in the baptismal washing. The latter is the interpretation adopted by the Vulgate (per lavacrum regenerationis et renovationis), the former is supported by codd. D*EFG which repeat διά before ἀνακαινώσεως. On the whole perhaps it is simpler to treat both genitives as marking the contents of spiritual baptism; it involves not only a new birth but a new life.

No words could more fitly conclude an examination of St Paul's teaching upon the subject of this book. It is here summed up in a single sentence and correlated with the other main features in Pauline theology.

3. There remains an Epistle which it is convenient to consider here, although its attribution to St Paul was doubted in ancient times and has been abandoned by modern scholarship. If Hebrews has no claim to rank as a Pauline Epistle, yet it has affinities to the Pauline writings which justify us in treating it as an appendix to them.

In the judgement of Origen the Epistle to the Hebrews is not inferior in point of thought to the Apostolic writings; "the thoughts are St Paul's," if the wording and composition are those of a disciple rather than of the master¹. A closer examination of the Epistle has shewn that though there is "a sense in which Origen is right," the writer of Hebrews "approaches each topic from a different side from that which would have been St Paul's²." It may be added that there are topics that meet us everywhere in the genuine writings of St Paul upon which this writer barely touches. In Hebrews there is no theology of the Spirit¹. The historical fact of the outpouring of the Spirit on the Church is mentioned more than once, but there is no reference to Christian prophecy, no working out of the relation which the Spirit bears to the Christian life; and it is chiefly as the inspirer of the Old Testament Scriptures that the Spirit is mentioned by this writer. When it is remembered that Hebrews is but little shorter than Romans or 1 Corinthians, its comparative silence in regard to the work of the Holy Spirit is remarkable, even if we make due allowance for the absorbing interest of its great subject, the Person and High Priesthood of the Son.

Part II. vi.

1 Cor. xii. 11.

The Spirit is first named in ch. ii. 4, where its workings are regarded as an evidence of the truth of the Gospel. God added his witness, witnessing with the first preachers of the word by signs and wonders and various works of power and by distributions² (μερισμοῖς) of Holy Spirit according to his will. The writer perhaps has in mind the tongues of fire distributing themselves among the company at the Pentecost; possibly also he recalls St Paul's words as to the Spirit dividing its gifts to each one severally as he will. But the conception is not quite the same as St Paul's; in Hebrews it is God who divides the gifts of the Spirit.

² Cf. Acts ii. 3, 1 Cor. xii. 4, 11, Apoc. i. 4.

Part II. vi.

There is a second reference to the distribution of the Spirit among the baptized in ch. vi. 4. For those who were once for all enlightened¹ and tasted the heavenly gift and became partakers of Holy Spirit and tasted² God's good word (ῥῆμα) and powers of a future age, and fell away, it is impossible again to renew them unto repentance. To the convert of the first age Baptism brought a whole circle of new experiences which are here described in an ascending order. There came to him the breaking of a new light upon the mind: a conviction of the reality and glory of the gift which had come from heaven in the person of Jesus Christ, a consciousness of possessing a share in the life and power of the Spirit of Christ, and as the Spirit wrought upon him, a growing sense of the beauty of the Divine word and of the nearness and strength of the invisible order. The whole constituted a body of evidence derived from personal knowledge which could not be rejected without a deliberate sinning against conscience; and such a sin the writer despaired of being able to reduce to repentance by any words that he could find.

Heb. x. 29.

Similarly in Heb. x. 29 the apostate is said to have outraged the Spirit of grace (τὸ πνεῦμα τῆς χάριτος ἐνυβρίσας). Apostacy is an act of ὕβρις, an insult to the Holy Presence which is the seal and manifestation of the Divine favour bestowed upon believers in Christ. The title Spirit of grace is unique in the New Testament, but it is used by the prophet Zechariah in a promise¹ which looks forward to Messianic times. This promise has been realized in the experience of the Church; the grace of the Spirit has been poured out upon her. But the Divine gift is forfeited by any member of the Church who by returning to Judaism or heathenism does violence to the august Guest who is the pledge of its bestowal. The teaching is similar to that of Eph. iv. 30, but the case in view is a more extreme one, and the language proportionately stronger.

In another group of passages the Holy Spirit is represented as speaking through the writers of the Old Testament; thus a Psalm is quoted with the formula as says the Holy Spirit (iii. 7), and a prophecy with the Holy Spirit also bears witness to us (x. 15); an interpretation of a Levitical ordinance, again, is said to give the meaning which the Holy Spirit intended to be attached to it (ix. 8)². The Holy Spirit is here, as in the Old Testament, God Himself in operation; God putting a word into the hearts of the legislators, psalmists, and prophets of Israel. He spoke in them, not as He has spoken

 Heb. i. 1 f. to speak through servants, in the fragments of a broken and partial revelation, in many modes corresponding to the many stages of the national life. Yet it was the voice of the Spirit of God which they heard, and that voice is heard by believers still as they read Moses and the Law and the Prophets.

Heb. ix. 14. In one remarkable passage the Christ is said to have through an eternal spirit (διὰ πνεύματος αἰωνίου) offered himself an unblemished sacrifice to God. Eternal spirit is anarthrous in the Greek, and it is perhaps overbold to render 'the Eternal Spirit,' as both our English versions do. On the other hand to think here of our Lord's human spirit as "the seat of His Divine Personality"¹ seems too much like an attempt to read the formal theology of a later age into a document of the first century. It is safer not to connect the term definitely either with the Holy Spirit, or with our Lord's human spirit or His Divinity, but to take the words in a more general and non-technical sense. The spirit which impelled our Lord to offer His great sacrifice was not the spirit of the world, narrow, time-bound, but a larger, longer outlook upon the whole of life; the spirit that views all things sub specie aeternitatis, that takes its standpoint in the invisible and eternal, and not in this short existence. Through that spirit He was strong to undergo the death of the Cross. As the Priest of the good things to come, He was upheld by a sense of the great issues of life and in

interpretation of the words does not of course exclude the thought of the Spirit of God acting upon the human spirit of the Redeemer. Such an 'eternal spirit' was in fact due to the interpenetration of His human spirit by the Divine, which enabled His whole manhood to respond to the call of the higher world. In our measure the same spirit is possible for us, while we look not at things seen but at things 2 Cor. iv.
not seen; for the things seen are for a season, but the things not seen are eternal. But in the life of our Lord the 'eternal spirit' was always paramount; while no earthly relation was neglected and no work that the Father had given Him to do here remained undone, the eternal things that are not seen were always in full view. No other power could have upheld Him on His way to the Cross or gained for Him the victory which He won upon it.

THE group of letters known as the Catholic Epistles may be regarded as representing the correspondence of the non-Pauline teachers of the Apostolic age. It will be interesting to see how far these letters agree with the Pauline letters in regard to the doctrine of the Holy Spirit; what aspects of the Spirit's work they emphasize; what new lines they mark out in this field of Christian thought and life. It will be convenient to begin with the Epistles of St James, St Peter and St Jude; the Johannine letters will naturally be considered with the Apocalypse of St John.

1. (a) The Epistle of St James, which is singularly reticent on Christian topics, contains one reference to the Holy Spirit. It occurs in a passage as to the meaning of which interpreters differ widely. The writer is warning his readers against worldliness. Whosoever is minded to be a friend of the world constitutes himself an enemy of God. Or suppose you that it is to no purpose that the scripture says, Πρὸς φθόνον ἐπιποθεῖ τὸ πνεῦμα ὃ κατῴκισεν ἐν ἡμῖν? For the moment the words must be left untranslated, but we shall assume that they are a citation from some inspired writing; the phrase 'the scripture says' is too well recognized a form of citation to permit us to punctuate as the Revised Version does¹. If nothing in the Old Testament comes near enough to the words which follow¹, they must be attributed, it would seem, to some lost Jewish or Christian writing. The latter is suggested by the last four words, if they are to be regarded as part of the scriptural quotation.

To begin with these last words. Whether we read the verb as transitive (*κατώκισεν*²) or intransitive (κατώκησεν), 'the Spirit which He made to dwell,' or, 'the Spirit which dwelt,' there is a clear reference to the Spirit of Christ, and the term is in full agreement with the language of St Paul³, which is seen in this respect to be common to the Pauline and non-Pauline Churches. But what is πρὸς φθόνον ἐπιποθεῖ? The verb is fairly common in the Greek of both the Old and the New Testaments, in the sense of longing or yearning for some object of desire, usually a personal object. The adverbial phrase (*πρὸς φθόνον*⁴) qualifies this longing; the Spirit of Christ in us longs after us, but jealously, with a love which resents any counteracting force such as the friendship of the world. His attitude towards such an antagonist is not merely ζῆλος but

φθόνος; His claim upon the allegiance of the human heart is that of one who can brook no rival; there is a righteous jealousy, as there is a righteous wrath, which is worthy of God and indeed is a necessary consequence of the greatness of His love. Any false conception of the Divine Character which might be suggested to the mind is at once dismissed by a second quotation. But he gives greater grace; wherefore it says, 'God sets himself against the overbearing, but to the humble he gives grace.' 'It is only those who resist God that God resists; men of humble hearts have no cause to fear the jealousy of the Divine Inhabitant, but will find themselves growing in His favour and in the gifts of the Spirit by which that favour is manifested.'

Thus the general sense of the passage seems to be: 'The friends of God cannot also be friends of the world. As the sacred writing says, the Spirit which God has planted within Christians yearns for the whole-hearted devotion of the hearts in which it dwells, with a jealous love which will not tolerate an intruder. But this Divine jealousy is consistent with an ever-growing generosity towards those who surrender themselves to the control of the Holy Spirit that is within them. It is the greatness of God's love towards us which resists the sin that sets itself up against Him, and excludes the friendship of the world from hearts in which His Spirit dwells.'

(b) The First Epistle of St Peter has affinities both of thought and diction with St Paul's Epistles, especially with Romans and Ephesians. This is admitted by so cautious a critic as Dr Hort¹, and it is hard to see how it can be denied even by those who are not prepared to allow that there is any literary connexion between these writings. But St Peter's Epistle is no mere imitation, and sheds new light on topics handled by St Paul even when it seems to adopt Pauline phraseology.

The Epistle opens with a salutation to elect sojourners of the Dispersion...according to God the Father's foreknowledge, in sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of Jesus Christ's blood. 1 Pet. i. 1.
'In sanctification of the Spirit' (ἐν ἁγιασμῷ πνεύματος) is a Pauline phrase which meets us in the first group of St Paul's Epistles (2 Thess. ii. 13), and in a passage not unlike this: God chose you from the beginning unto salvation, in sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth. But in the present context (1) the reference to the Holy Spirit is placed beyond doubt by the mention of God the Father and of Jesus Christ; and (2) the Holy Spirit's work of sanctifying the elect is brought into more direct connexion with the redeeming work of Christ. God's foreknowledge, as viewed by St Peter, works itself out in the hallowing of the human spirit by the Divine, which leads a man to obey the summons of the Gospel and to be sprinkled with the Blood of Christ, i.e., to undergo the moral purification¹ which comes from faith in the sacrifice of the Cross when it goes along with loyal obedience to the Lord who bought us with His blood.

A little further on (i. 11) we come to a notable passage on the Christological aspect of ancient prophecy. Concerning which salvation prophets carefully sought and searched, who prophesied of the grace in store for you, searching to what manner of season the Spirit of Christ² which was in them was pointing when it witnessed beforehand of the sufferings destined for Christ and the glories that came after these; to whom it was revealed that not to themselves but to you they ministered them; which things were in these days (vûv) reported to you by those who brought you the gospel by a Holy Spirit sent from heaven. 'The Messianic salvation was, as a matter of fact, foretold by certain of the Old Testament prophets; further, the Spirit of Christ, that Spirit which Jesus Christ Himself received and bestows, and which was already in them as the Spirit of prophecy, testified of the sufferings which were to befall Christ and the glories of His subsequent triumph, leaving only for their own consideration the question of the time, actual or approximate, when these prophecies were to be fulfilled. They knew, however, that their ministry was for the benefit of a future generation rather than of their own; they foresaw the present age with its proclamation of the Gospel brought to you in Gentile lands, and confirmed by a special mission from heaven. What the Spirit long ago foretold in the prophets, a new outpouring of the Holy Spirit has now, through the preachers of the Gospel, announced to the world as fulfilled in the Death, the Resurrection, and the exaltation of the historical person, Jesus Christ.'

This context is the locus classicus for the New Testament doctrine of Messianic Prophecy¹. It comes appropriately from the pen of the Apostle who on the day of Pentecost first expounded the Old Testament in the light of the Gospel of Christ.

There is an indirect reference to the Spirit's work of building up the Christian character, when in ch. iii. 4 St Peter speaks of the hidden man of the heart in the incorruptibility (τῷ ἀφθάρτῳ) of the quiet and gentle spirit which is in God's sight a costly ornament. The Apostle had just deprecated the expenditure, common among Gentile women, of time and money upon a personal adornment which was purely external (ὁ ἔξωθεν...κόσμος); against this he sets the adornment of the inner life with the spiritual jewels which no wealth can purchase, and which God only knows how to estimate at their true value. 'Spirit' is here as in Gal. vi. 1

1 Pet. iii. 4.

¹ A good summary of its teaching on this point may be seen in Edghill's Evidential value of Prophecy, p. 546 ff.

(ἐν πνεύματι πραΰτητος) the tone of the personal life shewing itself in daily conduct. But this is not the result of natural temperament; it is imparted by the Spirit of Christ¹.

In ch. iii. 18 (Even Christ died once for all for sins, ... put to death on the side of the flesh but made alive on that of (the) spirit, in which also he took his journey and preached to the spirits in ward) the 'spirit' seems clearly to be the human spirit of the Lord, as in the relative clause that follows 'the spirits' are the human spirits to which He preached after He had left the body. The 'quickening' to which St Peter refers is the new vital power of which His spirit was conscious when delivered from the burden of the flesh, and the direct reference to the Holy Spirit as the Giver of life which is suggested by the Authorized Version² cannot be maintained. Yet here again the quickening of the Lord's human spirit cannot be dissociated from the action of the Divine Spirit which in death as in life was present with it.

The 'sufferings destined for Christ³' were already being extended to His Body, the Church⁴. This, St Peter says, was cause for rejoicing. If you are reproached in the name of Christ, you are happy indeed, because in that case the Spirit of glory and the Spirit of God rests upon you (ἐφ' ὑμᾶς ἀναπαύεται)⁵;

i.e. 'what was said in the Prophets of the Messiah will be true of you also.' St Peter is thinking of Isaiah's great prophecy of Messiah (xi. 2). But he amplifies Isaiah's description of the Spirit; the Spirit as revealed to Christians is the Spirit of glory as well as the Spirit of God. The 'glory' which characterizes the Spirit of Christ makes a strong contrast to the reproach which was heaped on Christians for Christ's sake. There may be a reference to the glory of the Lord that filled the tabernacle of the Exodus under the cloud that lay upon it¹. Even the cloud was lit up as by an inward fire at night. So the Spirit of glory filled the Apostolic Church; even the cloud shone in the night of heathendom with the fire of love which revealed itself in the patience of the saints. Nor was the light a momentary flash which went out in darkness; it rested on the Church so long as she bore the reproach of Christ.

(c) The Second Epistle of St Peter has but one reference to the Holy Spirit, and it is perhaps characteristic of the writer's point of view that this has to do not with the life of the Church, but with the inspiration of the Old Testament prophets.

After describing the Transfiguration, of which St Peter was a witness, the Petrine writer proceeds: And we have the prophetic word thus made more sure; to which word you do well to take heed as to a lamp shining in a dark room, until day has dawned and the daystar arisen in your hearts; recognizing this first, that no prophecy of Scripture is of private interpretation; for it was not by man's will that any prophecy was ever brought, but as they were borne along by Holy Spirit men spake from God.

The general sense of this difficult passage seems to be as follows: The written word of prophecy has been confirmed by the vision of our Lord's glory seen by the three ἐπόπται on the Mount of Transfiguration, and Christians may well trust themselves to its guidance in this dark world till a light has dawned which will render the lamp of an external revelation unnecessary. Meanwhile, however, there is need to be careful in regard to the use to which prophecy is turned. It is not a puzzle which each man may solve as best he can; it has a definite purpose or message which is to be seized and followed. No prophecy in Scripture may be interpreted as each individual pleases; it did not proceed from human volition, but though it was spoken by man prophecy came from God through the breath of the Divine Spirit by which the prophets were carried on their course¹. The nearest parallel in the New Testament to this view of prophetic inspiration is in 2 Tim. iii. 16 (πᾶσα γραφὴ θεόπνευστος), but that passage does not suggest, as this does, the supersession of the prophet's intellect and will by the action of a superior force. The Petrine writer's teaching on inspiration is more

D to Acts xv. 29 φερόμενοι ἐν τῷ ἁγίῳ πνεύματι, and for other examples of this use of φέρεισθαι see Job xiii. 25 χόρτῳ φερομένῳ ὑπὸ πνεύματος; Acts ii. 2, where however φέρεισθαι is used of the wind itself. in accord with Philo's¹ or with that of the Christian fathers of the second century² than with the doctrine of the Apostolic age, and in using it as evidence account must be taken of the possibility that this Epistle may not be a genuine product of the days of St Peter and St Paul³.

(d) The Epistle of Jude also has but one distinct reference to the work of the Holy Spirit. Jude, following or followed by 2 Peter (iii. 3), cites a prophecy which he attributes to the Apostles (v. 17 ff.): They said to you, In the last time there shall be mockers, walking after their own lusts of impieties; and he proceeds, These are they who make nice distinctions⁴, psychic persons such as have no spirit. But ye, beloved, building yourselves on your holiest faith, praying in Holy Spirit, keep yourselves in God's love, awaiting the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ which leads unto eternal life. On the one hand the writer places before us a type of Christians who, while professing to be on a higher plane than their brethren, are in truth under the guidance of their lower rational nature, destitute of spiritual aspirations and intuitions, with no element in their personality that is in fellowship with the Spirit of God. Against these he sets those who hold a faith that demands the strictest sanctity, and build themselves upon it through the spirit of prayer, which is the voice of the Divine Spirit in man¹, and the vigilant self-discipline which preserves the consciousness of the Divine love². The difference between these two classes of believers is not nominal, but vital, and will reveal itself in the day of Christ, for which the truly spiritual wait. In this context the trinitarian form of v. 20 (ἐν πνεύματι ἀγίῳ...ἐν ἀγάπῃ θεοῦ...τὸ ἔλεος τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ) is too manifest to be overlooked. The fellowship of the Spirit, the love of the Father, the mercy of the Son, form, as in other passages in the Epistles, a closely related group³, the mention of any one of which leads naturally to the mention of the other two. The Spirit in believers leads them to the Father, and the love of the Father issues through the mercy of the Son in the fulness of an enduring life.

⁴ See Mayor's note on ἀποδιορίζοντες. Possibly the distinctions were such as those between πνευματικοί and ψυχικοί, the words being used not as by St Paul in 1 Cor. ii. 14 f., but in a spirit of uncharitable self-exaltation. Those who thus assumed to themselves the style of 'pneumatic' Christians were in truth 'psychic,' and destitute of the Spirit of Christ.

³ See 2 Cor. xiii. 14, Eph. iv. 4 ff., 1 Pet. i. 1 f., etc. The order of the Persons differs, and almost every possible arrangement is found: the Son, the Father, the Spirit; the Spirit, the Son, the Father; the Father, the Spirit, the Son; the Spirit, the Father, the Son; the Father, the Son, the Spirit.

2. Two Johannine writings remain to be considered, and both are fruitful in contributions to the doctrine of the Holy Spirit.

(a) The first Epistle of St John¹ mentions the Spirit first in ch. iii. 24: He who keeps his (God's) commandments abides in him, and he (God) in him; and in this we know that he abides in us, from the Spirit which he gave us (ἐδωκεν). This is repeated with slight changes in ch. iv. 13: in this we know that we abide in him and he in us, because he has given (δέδωκεν) us of his Spirit. The abiding fellowship of God with any man² and of the man with God becomes a matter of personal knowledge through his possession of the Spirit of God. If we keep God's commandments, the Spirit which we received when we believed and were baptized into Christ remains with us as a permanent gift: its continual presence in our hearts is placed beyond a doubt both by our consciousness of its workings within us, and by the witness of our lives. But the indwelling of the Spirit of God in men is the indwelling of God Himself; for it is by His Spirit that God dwells and works in us. That in one passage God is said to give the Spirit (τὸ πνεῦμα), but in the other a portion or measure of the Spirit (ἐκ τοῦ πνεύματος), is not material; the Spirit was

1 Jo. iv. 1 ff.

The greater the significance of the gifts of the Spirit, the more urgent the need of distinguishing between the Spirit of God and spirits which are not of God. And so, immediately after his first mention of the Spirit which God gave us, the writer proceeds: Believe not every spirit, but test¹ the spirits to see if they are from God; for many false prophets have gone out into the world. The prophets and teachers of the Church are not the only missionaries who are abroad; there are false prophets inspired by spirits which are not from God. There is a propaganda of evil as well as of good. Therefore the spiritual forces (τὰ πνεύματα) which are at work in the world must be tried by some test which will reveal their true character, before they can be trusted as manifestations of the Spirit of God. Such a test can be found. In this you recognize the Spirit of God. Every spirit which confesses Jesus Christ as come in the flesh is from God, and every spirit which confesses not Jesus is not from God; and this is the spirit of the Antichrist, of which you have heard that it is coming, and now it is in the world already... We are from God; he that knows God hears us; he who is not from God hears us not. From this we know the Spirit of the truth and the spirit of error². The Spirit that issues from God (τὸ ἐκ τοῦ θεοῦ) is 'the Spirit of the truth,' and it cannot but confess the truth. But the central truth is the Person of the Incarnate Lord, Jesus Christ come in the flesh. Here then is to be found the crucial test of spiritual influences ; they are of God in so far as they acknowledge Jesus : if they acknowledge Him not', they are not of God, they are the workings of the spirit of Antichrist, the power which opposes the Christ of God by substituting for Him some rival force in the region of conscience and thought. St John supplies a crucial test for his own age, when Ebionite and Docetic interpretations of the Person of Jesus were already abroad. It is not, it will be observed, a test of personal character that he offers such as our Lord Himself gives in Mt. vii. 15 ff., but one which relates to teaching only. Whatever the personal merits of a teacher may be, he is no true prophet, not taught by the Spirit of Christ, if he propagates error on the vital point of the Lord's Person and His place in human life. The Spirit of Christ is known by the witness which He bears to Christ². A secondary test, but one more easy of application and generally not less sure in its results, is to be found in readiness to accept the testimony of the authorized teachers of the truth. No man who was taught by the Spirit of Christ could reject the witness of His duly accredited messengers.

This is obviously a very important passage for the guidance of the Church in her attitude towards religious teachers. Whether they 'follow with us' or not may be immaterial; whether they hold fast the vital teaching of the Apostolic Church in reference to the Incarnation of our Lord is the criterion by which they must be judged. According as they do this or not their claim to be spiritual men is to be admitted or refused.

And as the true prophet is distinguished by his acknowledgement of the Person of Jesus Christ and his acceptance of the accredited teachers of the Church, so the true Christian is known by his faith in Jesus and love to the children of God (v. 1).

1 Jo. v. 1 ff. Every one who believes that Jesus is the Christ has been begotten of God¹, and every one who loves the begotter loves him who has been begotten of him. And the life which flows from a Divine birth is a victory, partly accomplished already, partly still in progress²: all that has been begotten of God conquers the world. Its faith is its victory, for faith realizes in the experience of each believer that conquest of the world which was once for all gained in the life and death of the Lord; This is the victory that overcame the world (ἡ νικήσασα), our faith. But faith rests on witness, and witness to Jesus is not wanting.

1 Jo. v. 6. This is he who came by way of water and blood, Jesus Christ; not in the Water only but in the Water and in the Blood. The Lord's Messianic course led Him through two baptisms, a baptism of water and a baptism of blood; and each was a witness that He answered to the character of the Christ, and satisfies the needs of men, both as their Teacher and their Sacrifice. But there is a third Witness which confirms and consummates the evidence of the life and death of the Lord. And the Spirit is that which bears witness (τὸ μαρτυροῦν), for the Spirit is the truth. The gift of the Spirit to the Church is the crowning, abiding, living proof that Jesus is the Christ. The Ministry, the Passion, ought to have sufficed to convince the world. But these belong to history, and the world asks for evidence which is present and tangible. It has received such evidence in the Spirit, which lives and manifestly works in the Body of Christ. It is fitting that the Spirit should be the supreme witness to the Christ, for the Spirit is the very Truth of God, knowing and speaking only the truth. Thus three witnesses agree together to declare Jesus to be the Christ; His baptism with water and the Spirit, with the wondrous Ministry which flowed from it; His baptism with blood, and the conquest over sin and death which was its issue; and chiefest of all, the living Spirit which according to His promise came upon the Church, and still abides with her, the Truth of God's innermost Being testifying day by day in the life of Christendom to the Truth incarnate in Jesus Christ our Lord. He who believes upon the Son of God has this supreme witness in himself; it belongs to the experience of his inner life. The unbeliever lacks this inward testimony of the Spirit, but the external evidence is sufficient to convict him of charging God with untruth. For God Himself speaks to the conscience in the life and death of Jesus and through the continual miracle of the spiritual life which flows from them and is daily seen in the Christian Church.

Apoc. i. 4f.

(b) The Apocalypse of St John is in form a letter to the Churches of Asia¹, and as such it opens with a salutation after the manner of the Epistles of St Paul. John to the seven churches which are in the Province Asia: Grace to you and peace from him who is and who was and who is coming, and from the seven spirits which are before his throne, and from Jesus Christ. The grace and peace which in all the Pauline letters to the Churches are invoked as flowing from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ² are here traced to a threefold source, the Eternal Father, the Incarnate Son, and, placed between Them, the seven spirits before the Father's Throne. Are the 'seven spirits' to be understood as equivalent to the Holy Spirit, the Apocalyptic writer having written ἀπὸ τῶν ἑπτὰ πνευμάτων for ἀπὸ τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος for some reason connected with the peculiar purpose and style of his book? Or are the seven spirits to be understood as referring to created or imaginary spirits and not to the Spirit of God? There is support, both ancient and modern, for the view that they are the seven angels of the Presence mentioned in Tobit, and it is slightly in favour of this interpretation that angelic heptads occur elsewhere in this Apocalypse¹. But the position of these seven spirits between the Eternal Father and the glorified Christ is unsuitable even for the highest of created spirits in a salutation which is in fact a benediction²; the adjuration in 1 Tim. v. 21³ is not a true parallel, for the order is different; and the well-known passage in Justin which seems to class the Spirit of prophecy with the holy angels⁴ must not be used to determine the practice of a writer in the New Testament who belonged to the Apostolic age. Furthermore, though the description of the seven spirits as fiery torches blazing before the throne (iv. 5) is not inappropriate to angels of the Presence, and the glorified Christ might be represented as using these highest of created intelligences to carry His messages to the world (v. 6), it is not easy to understand why they are described as the eyes of the Lamb. The personal relation to the Lord which is implied in this metaphor, and the permanent place in the presence of God assigned to them in their character of blazing lights, are appropriate to the Divine Spirit and wholly unsuitable to created spirits. On the whole, then, it is best to regard the seven spirits of God as answering to the operations or aspects of the One Spirit of God. We have already noticed more than once the use of the plural in connexion with the work of the Holy Spirit, which, one in essence, is manifold in its workings and manifestations¹. But why is the number seven chosen? As we learn from ch. v. 6 the writer of the Apocalypse has in view the seven eyes of Zech. iii. 9, but this reference does not explain the first appearance of the number in ch. i. 4; rather it was the number that suggested the reference to Zechariah. The spirits are seven because the churches are seven. Why seven churches are addressed, neither more nor less, we need not here enquire; but their number being seven, the spirits also are seven; i.e. the Spirit is regarded in its relations to each of them. The Spirit is one (τὸ πνεῦμα)², yet in reference to the seven churches there are seven spirits, for there is one manifestation, one aspect of the Spirit's manifold life for each, according to the needs of each.

² Cf. ii. 7, etc.

Putting together the four passages where mention is made by the Apocalyptist of the septiformis Spiritus, they are seen to yield some important teaching, part of which is new. The Spirit appears in its relation to the ascended Christ as the eyes of the Lamb, the organ by which He exercises His oversight of the world. It is ever before the throne of God, the Light of heaven; and yet it is carrying forward a mission which implies its presence in every region of the earth¹. Towards the Churches it has a special office, which it fulfils to each Christian community by inspiring it with the special endowments required by special circumstances. The Head of the Church alone possesses the fulness of the Spirit (iii. 1 ὁ ἔχων τὰ ἐπὶ τὰ πνεύματα); but He possesses it in order that He may supply each brotherhood with its own peculiar 'spirit'—its own spiritual character, and its own measure of grace.

A somewhat different conception is conveyed in the refrain (ii. 7, 11, 17, 29, iii. 6, 13, 22), which comes near the end of each of the separate messages to the churches: He that has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches. Since each message begins with a formula which attributes it to the glorified Christ, the voice of the Spirit is here identified with the voice of the Christ. The Spirit is the *vicaria vis*¹ of the ascended Christ, but it is not an impersonal force, and not a mere deputy. Its message to the churches is identical with Christ's message, and yet it is its own; *the Spirit speaks though not from itself*². It speaks in its essential unity: the seven are one when the churches are addressed in general³.

etc.

The Apocalypse concerns itself chiefly with one particular mode by which the Spirit communicated His mind to the Apostolic Church. The Spirit of this book is 'the Spirit of prophecy'. Apostles and Prophets are the only ministries recognized in it, and the prophetic order is prominent throughout (i. 3, x. 7, xi. 18, xvi. 6, xviii. 20, 24, xix. 10, xxii. 6, 9). The prophets were members of the congregations who were distinguished by their 'spirits', i.e. by possessing spiritual powers developed in an unusual degree by contact with the Spirit of God in His character as the prophetic Spirit. The process which the prophets underwent is described from the writer's own experience. I found myself in the Spirit, he twice relates⁴, i.e., in a state of mental exaltation, in which "the ordinary faculties of the flesh are suspended, and inward senses opened¹." In this condition his local surroundings were suddenly changed, or he became conscious of sights and sounds which to other men were invisible and inaudible. Thus in his first vision St John sees and hears the glorified Lord; in the second, he looks through the open door of Heaven and beholds the glory of God; later in the book he is transported² at one time into a wilderness (xvii. 3), at another to a high mountain (xxi. 10), and on both occasions his eyes are opened to new wonders.

But the 'ecstasy' was not the only manifestation of the prophetic Spirit, and perhaps not the ordinary one. The Spirit in the prophets of the later Apostolic Church was evidently the source of the higher Christian teaching in the congregations to which they ministered. There is no trace in the Apocalypse of any such abuse of prophetic powers as is implied in St Paul's account of the assemblies at Corinth. Forty years had passed since 1 Corinthians was written; and prophecy, in the Asian Churches at least, had entered on another stage, in which it fulfilled its purpose by serving the highest ends. The order of Prophets knew itself now to be charged with the great duty of bearing witness to Jesus, the very function of the Spirit itself; for, as St John adds, the witness of Jesus is the Spirit of *prophecy*¹, i.e. the two are in practice identical. To be a true prophet is to witness to Jesus, and to witness to Jesus is to have the prophetic Spirit; testimony is the raison d'être of prophecy.

17, 20.

But the Spirit of the Apocalypse, while it “spoke by the prophets,” spoke also in the Church and in each believer, answering the voice of Christ in the prophets. The voice of Christ is heard saying, Behold I come quickly; the Spirit and the Bride say, Come. That the hope of the Parousia was still alive at the end of the first century was doubtless due in large measure to the impassioned anticipations of prophets like St John. The Spirit which inspired the prophets responded in the Church, the Bride of Christ. Every believer in the depths of his own heart was ready with the same cry, Come, Lord Jesus; and this also was of the Spirit, which *intercedes for the saints according to the will of God*². Nor does the Apocalyptist forget the initial work of the Spirit upon those who though not yet of the Church are feeling after God: he that is athirst, let him come; he that will, let him take the water of life freely. It is the last echo in the New Testament of the Lord’s great offer of grace: *if any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink*³.

Our detailed examination of the writings of the New Testament is now ended; but the witness of the book as a whole remains to be considered. Hitherto we have dealt with the characteristic presentation of the doctrine of the Holy Spirit in each writing or group of writings ; in the case of St Paul it has even been possible to observe the growth of his thought upon the subject during the dozen years or more over which his letters extend. It is, however, not only permissible but necessary also to review the testimony of the New Testament without regard to the attitude of the individual writers. Apart from its canonical authority, the New Testament undoubtedly represents the belief of the Apostolic age, and from the sum of its teaching we gain the best conception that can now be formed of the doctrinal position which was reached by the first generation of believers under the guidance of the Spirit of Jesus Christ.

ventriloquist is ascribed to a *python-spirit*¹. As the pagan world presented itself to early Christian thought, its atmosphere was seen to be full of evil forces, of spiritual incorporeal natures which, though beaten back by the Gospel, perpetually assailed the Church and sought to regain their hold upon her members. Against these were arrayed on the side of goodness and truth an innumerable host of pure spirits, 'liturgic' powers, whose mission it was to minister² to the tempted members of Christ's Body as in the days of His flesh they had ministered to the Lord Himself³. And about the Church was an ever-growing concourse of human spirits, spirits of righteous men made perfect, spectators of the course which the imperfect have yet to run⁴.

2. But the ultimate antagonist of evil and source of goodness in the world is the Divine Spirit itself. For as there is a spirit of man which is in him, so there is a Spirit of God, a Divine Selfconsciousness and Selfknowledge which searches the very depths of the Infinite Nature that no creature can explore, and at the same time issues forth from God (τὸ ἐκ τοῦ θεοῦ), and is operative in the world. For this supreme spiritual Power the New Testament has several names, each of which has its own significance. It is the Spirit of God (τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ θεοῦ, πνεῦμα Part III. i. θεοῦ) or of the Lord (πνεῦμα Κυρίου), the Holy Spirit (τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον, τὸ ἅγιον πνεῦμα, or πνεῦμα ἅγιον), or simply the Spirit or Spirit, par excellence (τὸ πνεῦμα, πνεῦμα)¹. All these designations had been used by the LXX., but in different proportions; in the Old Testament the Spirit of the Lord (Jahveh) is the prevalent form, and the Spirit of God (Elohim) next in frequency, while the Holy Spirit is rare². In the New Testament, on the other hand, the Holy Spirit predominates, occurring 88 times, and the Spirit of God or of the Lord is found but seldom in comparison, about 25 times in all. 'The Spirit,' without any defining genitive or adjective, is rarely found in the Old Testament³; in the New Testament it is used to denote the Divine Spirit in 46 passages, not taking into account the numerous instances in which 'Spirit' without the article seems to stand for the working of the Spirit of God upon the spirit of man.

3. These figures are not without importance, for they reveal a change in the point of view from which the Divine Spirit is regarded by writers who lived after the Incarnation. (1) The New Testament gives prominence to the ethical side of the Spirit's nature and work which is expressed by the name 'Holy Spirit.' This is emphasized by the omission of the pronoun which accompanies the name when it is used in the Old Testament. In Psalm li. 11 and Isaiah lxiii. 10 the Hebrew has the spirit of thy (his) holiness, and the LXX. faithfully reproduces the pronoun in both passages¹. In the New Testament, on the contrary, it is but very occasionally that we read of *the Holy Spirit of God*². The 'Holy Spirit' is sufficiently definite—the Spirit that is essentially, characteristically, uniquely holy; which being holy breathes the atmosphere of holiness into any spiritual nature that it enters and inhabits. (2) The prevalence in the New Testament of the yet simpler designation 'the Spirit' or even 'Spirit,' without the article, which in St Paul³ and St John is almost the normal expression for the Divine Spirit when regarded as operative in the Church or in the individual human life, is significant of the new place which the Holy Spirit had come to fill in the experience of life. The presence and working of the Spirit of God are no longer conceived of as rare and isolated phenomena, but as entering into all Christian thought and work, an element in life so universal, so constantly meeting the observer, that the briefest of names was sufficient to indicate it.

³ I.e. in Num. xi. 26, xxvii. 18, and in Ezekiel (viii. 3 etc.).

² Later Jewish use employs רוּחַ קֹדֶשׁ as equivalent to רוּחַ אֱלֹהִים; see Dalman, Words of Jesus, p. 202 f. For the transition see Dan. v. 11 θ' πνεῦμα θεοῦ (+ ἅγιον AQ), ο' πνεῦμα ἅγιον, vi. 3 θ' πνεῦμα περισσόν, ο' πνεῦμα ἅγιον (אֵלֶּיךָ).

³ τὸ πνεῦμα or πνεῦμα occurs in St Paul nearly 50 times, and in St John (Ev., Epp., Apoc.) nearly 30 times.

Part III. i. When the Spirit was named every Christian reader would think at once of the Holy Spirit, unless the immediate context decided otherwise. 'Spirit' without the article is often ambiguous¹, but the ambiguity is one which could not have been altogether avoided, because it lies deeper than words—in the intimate relation and interaction of the human and the Divine within the spiritual life.

4. The Holy Spirit in the New Testament and more especially in the Epistles is regarded chiefly in relation to the Church and the Christian life, and the question of the Spirit's relation to God is never formally raised, and receives only a partial answer. It is clear indeed that in the New Testament as in the Old the Holy Spirit belongs to the sphere of the Divine and the uncreated. The Spirit of God which searches the depths and knows the heart of God is Divine, as the spirit of man is human. The Arian representation of the Spirit as a 'creature' and even 'the creature of a creature'² finds no support in Biblical theology, and is inconsistent with the whole conception of the Spirit's mission and work as it is unfolded by the writers of the New Testament. If the Holy Spirit does not receive the name of God, if there is no statement in regard to the godhead of the Spirit which corresponds to St John's θεὸς ἦν ὁ λόγος or to St Paul's ἐν μορφῇ θεοῦ ὑπάρχων, the fact is implied in passages which attribute to the Spirit the Divine prerogatives: in the remarkable saying of our Lord about the unpardonable sin ; in St Peter's representation of an attempt to deceive the Holy Spirit as 'lying unto God' ; in St Paul's description of the Church and even of the body of the baptized Christian as a sanctuary of God, seeing that the Spirit of God dwells in them. But the divinity of the Spirit does not rest on isolated sayings ; it is involved in the view which is given of the Spirit's work considered as a whole. The spiritual Power which is immanent in God and by His gift in men ; which regenerates, renews, sanctifies, teaches, guides, supports, strengthens all believers, and convicts the unbelieving world, cannot but be Divine. In the New Testament as in the Old the Spirit of God is God at work in the world, with this difference only that the field of His spiritual operations is vastly widened, and the manifestations of Divine power and wisdom connected with the Spirit are proportionately more impressive and more permanent.

5. Thus the Spirit of God is beyond doubt differentiated from all created life. Is it also differentiated from God Himself? God is spirit ; is the Spirit of God God, in such a sense that the conceptions are absolutely interchangeable? To this question the New Testament seems to give a negative answer. For the Spirit proceeds from God, is sent by God, is God's gift to the Church and to the individual believer. Here a distinction is clearly drawn between the Giver and the Gift, and a like distinction is seen in the relative functions ascribed to the Spirit and to

Part III. i. God ; as for example where the Spirit is said to
 Rom. viii. intercede for the saints according to the will of God,
 27. while the Searcher of hearts understands what the Spirit desires, seeing that the intercession is made by His own appointment. This is but one instance of many in which the Spirit of God is distinguished from God in regard to the offices which it fulfils. The differentiation is more complete in passages where God is called the Father, and the Father and the Son are coordinated or contrasted with the Spirit ; as in the Johannine promises of the Paraclete, and the words in which, according to the first Gospel, our Lord instituted Christian Baptism. The distinction which in such passages is clearly drawn between the Father, the Son, and the Spirit, when it is taken together with the personal attributes which are assigned to each, points to some profound mystery in the Being of God which makes it possible to say, as the Church says, 'The Spirit of God is God, yet not the Father nor the Son.' And if so, we seem to be forced to admit a threefold personality in God, and a personal life of the Holy Spirit which is its own. But the New Testament does not pursue this line of thought ; the ideas of personality and of tripersonality are foreign to its intensely practical purpose, and in its nearest approaches to a metaphysical theology it stops short at such a revelation of God—Father, Son, and Spirit—as answers to the needs and corresponds with the facts of the spiritual life in man.

6. But though the Holy Spirit is not definitely hypostatized in the New Testament, as a person in the unity of a tripersonal Essence, personal qualities are freely attributed to it as an agent in the field of human experience. Even the Old Testament represents the Spirit as speaking by the prophets, and as grieved by the sin or indifference of men¹. In the Acts and Epistles this is carried much further²; the Spirit is said to be tempted and resisted; it can send men forth to a new work, or forbid them to enter on it; it can bear witness, it can intercede, it can endow men with its gifts, distributing to each severally as it wills. Is this mere personification, due to the habit of regarding the Spirit as the energy of the Living God³? can we attach any further significance to it in view of the still larger class of passages where the Spirit is treated as the breath that fills, the unction that anoints, the fire that lights and heats, the water that is poured out, the gift in which all believers partake? Or are these impersonal representations to be explained as belonging only to the temporal manifestation of an Eternal Spirit, which in its gifts and working is as breath or unction, fire or water, but in its essence is a centre of conscious personal life? That the latter is the true interpretation of the facts seems to follow from the great context in the fourth Gospel where the Spirit is represented as another Paraclete. It may be possible to exaggerate the force of the masculine παράκλητος and the corresponding masculine pronoun (ἐκεῖνος)¹, just as it is possible to make too much of the neuter gender of πνεῦμα or of the feminine gender of ῥῆμα. But it cannot be doubted that throughout the whole discourse the rôle of a personal advocate is ascribed to the Spirit. He takes the place of the absent Christ. He is sent by Christ from the Father, and when He has come He will guide believers as Christ had guided them hitherto, will teach as Christ taught, will take of that which is Christ's and declare it to them, will convict the world which the ministry of the Christ failed to convict. That this advocate will be invisible and purely spiritual does not make against His personality; it is in that which is most spiritual in ourselves that we find evidence of our own personal life. That He fulfils the whole of our Lord's personal functions towards the Church, that He belongs to the category of Paraclete—Teacher, Director, Protector, Counsellor—this invests Him with all the essential attributes of that which we understand by personality.

7. As seen in the New Testament the Spirit of God is the very life and energy of God, issuing from the fountain-head of Deity; the selfconsciousness of God, 'exploring the depths' of the Divine heart and mind; the 'Spirit of the' absolute 'truth,' nay, 'the truth' Itself; the 'finger of God,' by which His work is done in the spiritual world. The life, the consciousness, the truth, the power of God is God; God living, thinking, teaching, working. But God thus manifested is in the thought of the New Testament clearly differentiated from God in His own infinitude, the fountain of the Divine life, the Father, and from God the Word and Son of the Father. The Spirit is neither the Father nor the Son, although He is God. And though in His workings and gifts He is regarded as a power and a gift rather than a person, and described under figures borrowed from external and inanimate nature, yet in His own Divine life it is impossible to doubt that He possesses that which answers in some higher and to us incomprehensible way to personality in man. Even in His relation to the Church and to the world He bears a personal name and fulfils the rôle of a personal office. But beyond these lines of thought the Apostolic age did not penetrate. It was occupied with the appreciation of the Spirit's work rather than with the doctrine of His Person or of His relation to the Father and the Son. The Christology of the first century is more advanced than its Pneumatology; partly because, while the questions which arose in the Apostolic Church compelled its leaders to

THE SPIRIT OF JESUS CHRIST.

THE New Testament, as it speaks of the Spirit of God, speaks also of the Spirit of Jesus¹, of Christ², and of Jesus Christ³. The Spirit of the Father⁴ is also the Spirit of His Son⁵. These designations clearly indicate a relation between our Lord and the Holy Spirit which is not shared by the members of the Church. The Spirit is not correlated in like manner with any other name.

Part II. i. ii.

What is the teaching of the Apostolic age as to this unique relation of Jesus Christ to the Spirit of God?

1. Two of the Gospels trace it back to His Conception. That which was begotten in Mary was of Holy Spirit; the Holy Spirit came upon her, the Power of the Most High overshadowed her in such wise that that which was born of her was entitled to be called holy, son of God. The incipient humanity of our Lord was 'of the Spirit' on the one hand, as it was of Mary on the other; its substance was hers,

Part III. ii. but the vitalizing power which brought it into life was His. As in the mystery of natural generation the human father impresses on his child the lineaments of his own character, so by the action on Mary which superseded paternity the Holy Spirit imparted to her son, not the human nature (which was wholly of the Virgin Mother), but the sinless image and likeness of God. The facts are related only by the writers of the first and third Gospels, but they are in the background of St Paul's doctrine of the "Last Adam" or the "Second Man¹." The Second Man is of heaven; His life was from above, its whole course was a victory over sin, and it issues in the quickening of the race. The Apostle, as his subject requires, hastens on to the magnificent end; the Gospels shew us the beginning. The whole began with a creative act on the part of the Holy Spirit of God. Jesus was in relation with the Divine Spirit from the first moment of His human existence. The Spirit of God was from that moment the Spirit of Jesus, the vivifying sanctifying power by which He entered on His life as the Son of Man and lived it to the end.

2. As the years went by, a fresh relation with the Spirit began. The Spirit of Jesus became the Spirit of the Christ. All the Gospels describe the consecration of Jesus to the Messianic office: how

¹ 1 Cor. xv. 47 ὁ δεύτερος ἄνθρωπος ἐξ οὐρανοῦ. It is not meant that St Paul was aware of the circumstances connected with the Conception. On the Conception as the basis of the new humanity see Gore, Dissertations, p. 63 ff.

God anointed Him with the Spirit for the Christ-life. The Christ-life began, as the human life itself began, with a special act of the Holy Spirit. As in the Conception the Spirit descended on Mary, so at the Baptism it descended on her Son, anointing Him to be the Prophet, the Priest, the King. As the Spirit of the Conception gave sweetness and strength to His childhood, youth, and early manhood, so the Spirit of the Baptism gave power to the mature years of the Ministry, to the crisis of the supreme Sacrifice and to the risen life, and gives power to the larger activities of the Lord's present life in Heaven. The Spirit of the Christ is the secret source of the Christ's ceaseless energies: in the power of the Spirit Part III. ii. explains all—miracles¹, teaching, victory over temptation and death, and that vast authority which He now wields in heaven and on earth. L.c. iv. 14.

3. But as the Baptist already knew, the Christ was not only baptized with the Spirit, but was the true Baptizer; receiving the Spirit without measure in order that He might impart it in measure to His brethren. He upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit Jo. i. 33.

Part III. ii. descending and abiding upon him, the same is he that baptizes in Holy Spirit. The Spirit of Christ is not only the Spirit that anointed the Christ, but the Spirit with which the Christ anoints. The Epistles of the New Testament, which are silent about the fact of the Lord's Baptism¹, as they are about most of the other facts of the Gospel history, speak freely of the anointing received by all Christians from the Holy One, i.e. the ascended Christ². Perhaps it was because of the witness which it bore to the continuation of the Messianic anointing in the Body of Christ that the Church accepted the name of 'Christian' applied to her by the heathen, although out of reverence for the Lord she did not usually or at first speak of her members as 'Christs³.'

Even in the Synoptic Gospels the Christ is sometimes represented as preparing His disciples for an era of fuller spiritual life. In the fourth Gospel this extension of the Spirit's work forms the subject of a series of instructions which extends from the third chapter to the last but one. These discourses are in substance the Lord's own comment upon the relation which as the Christ He bears to the Spirit, and which the Spirit bears to Him and His.

According to the fourth Gospel the Spirit is the principle of spiritual life by which men are born into the Kingdom of God. This new life of the Spirit it belongs to Jesus, in virtue of His own anointing as the Christ, to impart and to maintain. In Him 'the whole fountain of the Holy Spirit'¹ is stored for the use of mankind, and from it He gives the living water to all who ask of Him or come to Him for it. This was said to those who were not even disciples, such as the Samaritan woman, and the mixed crowd in the Temple-courts. A fuller teaching was reserved for the inner circle of His Apostles. On the night before the Passion, in circumstances of peculiar solemnity, the Lord spoke at last of the Spirit's coming as imminent, and revealed the relations in which the Christ-gift stands both to the Father and to Himself. The Father is still the ultimate Source and Giver; He whose love gave the Son gives, in the last resort, the Spirit also¹. Nevertheless, since the Son is the way and the truth and the life for men, and no man can come to the Father but by Him, the Son will send the Spirit from the Father; i.e. the Spirit will come to men not immediately from the Father, but mediately through the Son. Not only is the Spirit given at the request of Jesus (ἐγὼ ἐρωτήσω) and in His name (ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί μου), but by His act (ἐγὼ πέμψω); He will mediate in the mission of the Part III. ii. other Paraclete, and thus will baptize with the Holy Spirit, as He Himself was baptized by the Father¹. The Paraclete Spirit is the Spirit of Christ not only as received by Christ from the Father, but as bestowed by Christ upon the Church and all her members.

4. But this is not all. The Spirit sent by the Christ is His second Self, ἄλλος παράκλητος, 'another,' distinct from the Paraclete who is taken away, a second of the same and not of a different order². That the second Paraclete is not identical with the first is sufficiently clear from the words I will send him. The Spirit is not the Christ, but the Chrism; not the Son, but the Spirit of the Son. Yet the correspondence is so close, the equivalence so complete, that the Lord again and again in this discourse identifies Himself with the Spirit: I will not leave you bereaved, I come to you...again I shall see you...there comes an hour when I shall no more speak to you in proverbs but shall plainly declare to you concerning the Father. These words may have an ulterior reference to the Parousia, but it can scarcely be doubted that they point primarily to the coming of the Spirit of Christ in His name. And the measure of identification which they imply is justified by the experience of the Apostolic Church.

² See Lightfoot on Gal. i. 6 f.: "ἄλλος adds, while ἕτερος distinguishes." On the question whether this distinction holds good in St John see Abbott, Johannine Grammar, 2676 f. It is impossible to conceive of ἕτερον παράκλητον standing in this context.

The Spirit in its working was found to be in effect the equivalent of Jesus Christ. Thus St Paul writes, If any has not Christ's Spirit, that man is not his (Christ's); but if Christ is in you, the body indeed is dead...but the spirit is life..., where the possession of the Spirit of Christ is clearly regarded as tantamount to an indwelling of Christ Himself¹. The same line of thought seems to be followed in the words, The Lord is the Spirit, but where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. But we all... are being transformed...as by the Lord the Spirit, where 'the Spirit of the Lord' and 'the Lord the Spirit' (i.e. Christ in the power of His glorified life) are viewed as being in practice the same. Men who lived within a short space of time after the Ministry, the Ascension, and the Pentecost realized that where the Spirit was Christ was, and what the Spirit wrought was wrought in fact by Christ. Even in the words spoken by His Spirit through the prophets they recognized the voice of Christ. Though the Spirit of Christ, through whom the glorified Lord comes to His Church² and sees as with eyes of flame and works and speaks, is neither the human spirit of Christ, nor the pre-existent Logos who was made flesh, yet it is so absolutely one in will and thought with the Divine-Human Christ that Christ is still in the Spirit present and at work on earth, dwelling in men and revealing Himself to them after a manner more expedient for them than if He were still visibly

Part III. ii. in their midst. Whether this equivalence is due to the perfect interpenetration of the Lord's glorified humanity by the Spirit, or to His oneness with the Spirit in the mystery of the Divine Life, neither St John nor any of the New Testament writers has taught us; the question did not lie within their scope, and possibly does not lie within the grasp of the human mind. The Spirit alone searches the depths of God, and where the Spirit is silent as to their contents it is hazardous and indeed vain to speculate.

Gal. iv. 6. 5. The Spirit of Jesus, the Spirit of Christ, is also described as the Spirit of the Son of God. God sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts. The Son is here the Incarnate Son, not the pre-existent Word, and no direct inference can be drawn as to the relation of the Spirit to the Logos. The Spirit of the Son is the perfect spirit of sonship which was manifested in the human life of Jesus Christ. It was this Spirit which made it His meat and drink to do His Father's will, which maintained in Him unbroken fellowship with God, which inspired the supreme cry of filial submission Abba, Father; not what I will, but what thou. That which was in Him the Spirit of sonship becomes in His members the Spirit of adoption. Sons such as He is they cannot be, for He is the Only-begotten; adopted sons they can be and are¹, and the Spirit of the Only-begotten has been sent to give them the filial character which was in Him.

6. The Spirit is expressly and repeatedly associated with the glorified life of our Lord in Heaven. The Apocalyptic seven spirits of God, while they blaze like torches before the Eternal Throne, are at the same time the eyes of the Lamb which are sent forth by Him into all the earth. This figure connects the sevenfold energies of the Spirit with the person of the Ascended Christ. The Spirit was not in the world in the fuller sense until Jesus was glorified: having been by the right hand of God lifted up and having received from the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, he poured forth the Pentecostal effusion; if I depart, He Himself had said, I will send him (the other Paraclete) unto you. That in the last days of the Messianic age the Spirit should be poured out not on the prophetic order only but on all the people of Jahveh had been clearly foretold; it was the great promise of the Father, conveyed through Isaiah and Jeremiah, Joel and Zechariah, and on the eve of its fulfilment revived by the Lord Himself. But the gift was kept in the hands of God until it could be claimed by a sinless and victorious humanity: until the Paraclete with the Father obtained from the Father the mission of the second Paraclete who was to abide with men to the end of time. Thus the outpouring of the Spirit was the direct result of the glorification of the Son, and a witness to that great event. Of the Ascension there were few witnesses, and they saw only the form of the Son of Man disappearing in a cloud. Stephen in an ecstasy saw the same form standing at the right hand of God.

7. The question will be asked whether the New Testament recognizes an eternal relation between the Only-begotten Son and the Holy Spirit, such as the ancient Church had in view when she spoke of the Spirit as our Lord's 'very own,' or in the West confessed that He 'proceeds from the Son' and not from the Father only¹. And the answer must be that there is no explicit teaching upon this point in the Apostolic writings. Even the statement that the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Father does not explicitly teach the doctrine of an Eternal Procession as it is conveyed in the modified terms of the Creed², while for the Eternal Procession from the Son no direct support from the New Testament has ever been claimed. Nevertheless it is a fair inference from the teaching of the New Testament that the Spirit of God belongs eternally to the Divine Essence, and that the Only-begotten Son who as the Word was in the beginning with God stands in a timeless relation to the Divine Spirit. If the Spirit of the Father was the Spirit of the Incarnate Son, dominating the whole human life of the Word made flesh, who can doubt that it was also in the most intimate relation with that pre-existent Life which was with the Father before the world was? All this lies in the background of New Testament thought, ready to be drawn into fuller light by the consciousness of the Church as she pondered on her inheritance of Apostolic truth.

THE SPIRIT IN THE CHURCH.

Part III.
iii.

I. OUR Lord's teaching upon the Holy Spirit touches but rarely and lightly on His own unique endowment with the Spirit. There is no reference in His words to the Holy Conception and scarcely any to the Baptism. On the other hand He spoke freely and sometimes at considerable length of the distribution of His Spirit to the Church. In His earlier references to the Spirit the gift is offered to individuals. The Father who is of heaven will give Holy Spirit to those who ask him; unless one has been born of water and Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God; if any thirsts, let him come unto me and drink. But as the end approached and the Pentecostal effusion drew near, Jesus spoke of the Spirit as to be given to His disciples collectively¹. The discourse of John xiv.—xvi. was perhaps addressed to the Eleven only, and it might have seemed to them at the time that the promise of the Paraclete was limited to their own body; a similar impression might have been created by the Lord's parting words in Acts i. 5, 8. If so, the error was corrected by the course of events. When after the Resurrection the Spirit was given with a sacramental breathing, accompanied by the words which have long been used at ordinations in the West, other believers were present with the Apostles¹, probably all who were then in Jerusalem. Thus the assembly which received the Easter gift of the Spirit was representative of the whole Church, and not of the Apostles only and their successors in the ministry of the Church. The party in the upper room which awaited the coming of the Spirit numbered one hundred and twenty², and though the word is not used in the Acts before ch. v. 11, this assembly was in fact the assembled Ecclesia. All were still together when the Spirit came³, and if each was separately visited⁴, the illapse was simultaneous and collective; the Church as a whole received the Paraclete. Such an effusion of the Spirit was vouchsafed only once again, when the firstfruits of the Gentile Church were baptized with the Holy Spirit as the firstfruits of the Jewish Church had been on the day of Pentecost⁵. In all other cases the Spirit came to new converts when they were added to the body of the Church by baptism and its complementary rite, the laying on of hands on the baptized¹. The Spirit was the corporate possession of the Body of Christ, and it became the property of the individual convert when he was made a member of the Ecclesia. No man could be Christ's who had not Christ's Spirit, and ordinarily no man could have Christ's Spirit but by being "added" to the brotherhood of Christ's disciples. When St Peter says that God gave the Holy Spirit "to them that obey Him," the notes of obedience which were in his mind were doubtless the same that he required on the Day of Pentecost, namely repentance, faith, and baptism. The Apostle of the Uncircumcision did not differ herein from the Apostle of the Circumcision, as his conversation with the disciples of the Baptist at Ephesus plainly shews. No gift of the Spirit could be expected, he taught them, until they had been baptized into Christ and made members of His Church².

Acts v. 32.

2. It was given to St Paul beyond the other Apostles to develop the conception of the Christian Ecclesia, and together with it the doctrine of the Spirit's relation to the Church. This is done chiefly in two of his Epistles, 1 Corinthians and Ephesians. In 1 Corinthians it is his aim to check "the excess of individuality" and "the diminished sense of corporate responsibilities"³ which were due to the temperament of Greek thought and life. He meets these tendencies by setting forth the relation of the Spirit to the Ecclesia. The local congregation of baptized believers is a sanctuary (ναός), in which God dwells by His Spirit; it is a Body of Christ, into which all its members have been admitted by being baptized in one Spirit. Such a community as the Corinthian Church might well create upon the mind of an observer the impression of diversity and not of unity; its social differences, its class distinctions, its variety of spiritual gifts would suggest the presence of incompatible or hostile elements which made corporate life impossible. But no diversities could shake the fundamental unity which comes from the indwelling Spirit; and the multiplicity of the members and the manifoldness of their functions and gifts can no more prevent a Christian Church from being one than the unity of the human body is destroyed by the complexity of its structure.

The Epistle to the Ephesians carries this argument into a larger field. Here it is not the disparity of gifts or temperaments in a local society that threatens unity, but the strife between Jew and Gentile which affected all Christian societies in the first century. Again the danger of disunion is met by unfolding the work of the Spirit in the Ecclesia. *Through him (Christ) we both have our access in one Spirit unto the Father...in whom (Christ) each several building*¹ grows into a holy temple in the Lord...in whom you also are builded together for a habitation of God in the Spirit. Here as in 1 Corinthians (iii. 16) each separate congregation is regarded as a local sanctuary, and the various churches are so many spiritual buildings springing up everywhere throughout the provinces of the Empire, and designed as so many dwelling-places of the Living God. But as the Epistle proceeds, the Apostle sees before him the vision of an Ecclesia which is not limited to a single city or a single province but includes all the baptized in all the provinces of the Roman world. Perhaps this greater Ecclesia was suggested, as Dr Hort inclines to think¹, by the sense of the vastness of the Roman Empire which grew upon the Apostle during his residence in Rome. However this may be, it is only in this Epistle and in the kindred Epistle to the Colossians, written about the same time², that we hear of a Church of all believers, an universitas fratrum Christianorum. As Dr Hort acutely remarks, this universal Church is not regarded by St Paul as the sum of all the local churches, but as the sum of all the baptized; "the members which make up the One Ecclesia are not communities but individual men³." As the Holy Spirit, dwelling in the heart of each member of the local community, binds all together in a corporate unity; so, by dwelling in all the faithful everywhere, it creates the worldwide unity of a Catholic Church. There is one Body and one Spirit, even as there is one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all. 3. The Holy Spirit, then, is the bond of unity in the Christian Society, whether the unit is the congregation or the universal Church. But the Church, local or catholic, is not regarded in the New Testament as a mere aggregate of atoms or an inanimate organization composed, like an instrument, of many separate parts. The individuals who compose the Church are the members of a living body; it is the common life of the body which makes them one, and this life is inspired by the Spirit of Christ. The Church is the body of Christ; the glorified Lord is its head; Christ is incomplete without His Church as the Church is incomplete without Christ¹. From the exalted Head the life of the Spirit flows down into all the members; there is vitality and there is growth in every part which is in real union with the Lord, and in the body as a whole²: from whom all the body, constructed and drawn together by every ligament of the supply, according to the working in the measure of each single part, causes the growth of the body. The Spirit is not named here, yet the word 'supply' (τῆς ἐπιχορηγίας) points not obscurely to its gifts. The "supply of the Spirit of Jesus

— Christ¹ is represented as descending from Christ into the Church through certain channels of communication, among which it is not overbold to reckon the usual means of grace, and as operating in Christ's members individually to the advantage of the whole body, which thus grows, as the Epistle to the Col. ii. 19. Colossians adds, the growth of God—with a more than human, a Divine increase.

4. And as this Divine life and growth of the Body of Christ is of the Spirit, so it is by the Spirit in her that the Church fulfils her proper work. Life and growth imply work, and a work proper to a particular organization. What does the New Testament represent as the special work of the Body of Christ under its present conditions? The answer is, in a word, To witness to the invisible Christ. According to the Acts the very last words spoken by our Lord before He withdrew into the unseen assigned this work to the Church, and connected her discharge of it with the coming of the Paraclete: ye shall receive power when the Holy Spirit has come upon you, and ye shall be my witnesses...unto the end of the earth. The Spirit is the primary witness of the Christ: the Paraclete...the Spirit of the truth...he shall bear witness of me: the Spirit is that which bears witness, because the Spirit is the truth. But the witness of this Spirit is borne in and through the Body of Christ.

The first generation bore witness of what they had seen and heard in the days of Christ's flesh: ye also bear witness, because ye are with me from the beginning. Part III.

 Their testimony, i.e. the witness of the Apostolic Church, remains in the four Gospels. But even in the Apostolic age it was realized that what met the eye and the ear in the Lord's brief Ministry was but a small part of that which He is and came to do and teach. In reviewing His own teaching, even that which had been given to the innermost circle of the disciples, the Lord could say, These things I have Jo. xvi. 25.
spoken unto you in proverbs: the hour comes when I shall no more speak unto you in proverbs but shall tell you plainly (παρησίᾳ) of the Father. That hour came when the Spirit came. The Spirit not only recalled our Lord's words, but revealed heights and depths in Him hitherto unsounded, declaring that which is His, and thereby (since whatsoever the Father has is His) declaring also that which is the Father's. It was in some sense a new Christ that the Church came to know after the Pentecost: even though we 2 Cor. v.
have known Christ after the flesh, yet now we know 16.
*him thus no more*¹, i.e. we know Him after the Spirit, by a process different from that of bodily intercourse, and by which He is placed in a new light. Of this deeper and fuller revelation of Jesus Christ the Apostolic Church taught by the Spirit of Christ also bore witness, and in the Fourth Gospel and the Epistles of St Paul and St Peter and St John we have a record of this interpretation of our Lord's

¹ Dr Rutherford paraphrases: "if indeed there was a time when we knew Christ in the world's way, we do not so know Him now."

teaching and person which corresponds with the glorification of Him by the Spirit that had been foretold. Nor is there any reason to limit the Spirit's witness in the Church to the lifetime of those who were eyewitnesses and ministers of the word. The life of the Church is continuous, and the Paraclete came to abide with her for ever. The interpretation of Christ has, as a matter of fact, been carried forward by the Catholic Church in the formulation of Creeds, and the evolution of Christian thought and of the manifold types of Christian life. This is not the place to enter on that great subject, but we may note the light which it receives from the New Testament doctrine of the Spirit. Our Lord's words about the Paraclete justify us in attributing to His presence in the Church the progressive witness of Christendom to Christ during the centuries which have passed since the end of the Apostolic age.

Jo. xiv. 26,
xvi. 13.

5. The continued witness of the Spirit in the Church implies a continual teaching of the Church by the Spirit. This also has a place in the Lord's great promise of the Paraclete: He shall teach you all things¹...He shall lead the way for you to enter into all the truth. When St John wrote his first Epistle the experience of half a century had proved the truth of these words: You have an anointing from the Holy One; all of you know². As for you, the anointing which you received from him abides in you, and you have no need that any teach you...his anointing teaches you concerning all things, and it is true. This appeal is not addressed to Apostles or Prophets, but to the members of the Church in general. It recognizes that the promise of Christ was not for the Eleven only or for their successors, but for the whole Christian society.

1 Jo. ii. 20,

Part III.
iii.

Yet in what sense was it true that the congregations of the province of Asia to which St John wrote knew all things, or even that they all knew the truth and needed not to be taught? It is clear that complete knowledge of the contents of their faith could not have been theirs in actual possession. But it was potentially and implicitly conveyed to them in the gift of the Spirit, and would be progressively realized in their experience if they for their part were loyal to their Teacher. What happens in the case of individuals happens on a great scale in the history of the Church. The Divine Teacher is always with her, and the teaching in itself is complete, although its assimilation by human thought and in human life is progressive, and at times, even for long periods of time, may seem to recede. In the abiding presence of the Paraclete the Body of Christ possesses the fulness of the truth, even in an age when it is least able to understand or to interpret His teaching. But advance in spiritual knowledge depends upon the Church herself; it is as she follows her Guide and learns His lessons of truth that she attains to fuller measures of Divine illumination. Thus the promise of Divine teaching is not a promise that the judgements of the Church shall be infallible or irreformable; on the contrary, it holds out the hope of a progress in knowledge proportionate to the faithful use of light already given.

iv. 13.

6. The perfecting of the Body of Christ is the final purpose of the coming of the Paraclete. Churches and the members of churches are being builded together in the fabric of the Universal Church, that they may become a habitation of God in the Spirit. The process is to continue until we arrive, all of us, at the unity of the faith and knowledge of the Son of God: until we attain to a perfect man, to the measure of the stature of the fulness of the Christ. When this end has been reached the work of the Paraclete will have been accomplished, and the long history of the Church's immature years will find its consummation in perfect unity, perfect knowledge, and the perfect life. Much that now seems to be final in creed and in life, much that is and ought to be final under present conditions, will then be lost in the full light of day. When that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away. What is limited, defective, belonging to human imperfection, shall disappear; what is of the Spirit shall remain, the imperishable possession of the perfected Church.

IV.

THE SPIRIT AND THE MINISTRY.

I. THE Church of Christ is, as St Peter teaches, a spiritual house built of living stones and designed to be not a Sanctuary only but a Priesthood: a *holy priestly function*¹, to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ. Its members constitute a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people destined for a Divine possession; a new Israel succeeding to the high privileges of the ancient people of God². St John has the same conception, and amplifies it after his manner. He (Jesus Christ) made us a kingdom, priests to his God and Father; they (the saints and martyrs) shall be priests of God and of Christ. Some glimpse of the priestly character of the Church is caught also by St Paul and in Hebrews: present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, your reasonable service: let us offer up a sacrifice of praise to God continually. In these passages the New Testament teaches the priesthood of the Church without

2. On the other hand the New Testament speaks with equal clearness of the existence within the Church of special ministries which are not common to the whole Christian society, but possess a priestly character and are in some measure analogous to the special priesthood that distinguished the tribe of Levi from the other tribes of the priestly nation of Israel. Though no emphasis is laid on the fact, it comes into view incidentally more than once in the Acts and Epistles. The ministry of the prophets and teachers in the Church of Antioch is represented as a λειτουργία rendered to the Lord², a word which with its cognates is repeatedly used in the LXX. in reference to the official ministrations of the Priests and Levites. In a famous context St Paul describes his labours among the Gentiles as sacerdotal, borrowing term after term³ from the Greek vocabulary of Levitical worship. It may be said that such a passage is metaphorical, and therefore must not be pressed, but it is neither more nor less metaphorical than the passages which speak of the priesthood and sacrifices which are common to all Christians. In both cases the priesthood and the sacrifices are spiritual, and in both they present nevertheless a real analogy to the hierarchy and the sacrificial offerings of the Old Testament. This analogy is so close that it is made by St Paul the basis of an argument for the support of the preachers of the Gospel; those who preach the Gospel have as much right to live of the Gospel as the ministers of the Jewish altar had to share with the altar. Thus in a true sense the Christian ministry succeeded to the Levitical priesthood¹, although the whole Levitical system has become obsolete and the only sacrifices which remain are spiritual and personal.

Part III.

All Christian service, and in particular the special form of service which falls to the share of the Christian ministry, is rendered by the Spirit of God. The ministry of the New Covenant is a ministry of the Spirit as contrasted with the mechanical performance of the prescribed functions which constituted the bulk of the Levitical worship. And being such, it demands the special assistance of the Holy Spirit. As the whole Church is consecrated for its spiritual priesthood by the gift of the Spirit, so the ministry of the Church, which is directly concerned with spiritual things, needs in a high degree the anointing of the Spirit of Christ. We turn to the New Testament to see what provision is made for the supply of this need.

3. The New Testament mentions ministries of many kinds, some which exhausted themselves in the apostolic or sub-apostolic age; others, which took root in the Churches and grew into permanent orders of men. The distinction cannot always be very clearly made out; in the lists which are given in 1 Cor. xii. and Eph. iv. apostles, prophets and evangelists evidently belong to the former class, but it is less certain to which we ought to refer pastors and teachers, helps and governments. Probably in many instances the charismatic gifts were possessed by persons who at the same time held office in the local Christian societies as 'presbyters' or 'bishops.' But however this may have been, the New Testament associates both types of ministerial life with special gifts of the Holy Spirit.

In the case of the charismatic ministries this needs no demonstration. Apostles and prophets possessed powers which marked them out as under the direct teaching of the Holy Spirit; they were gifts of the ascended Christ, who works by the Spirit¹; the mystery of Christ² was revealed to them in the Spirit; they brought the gospel to the world by a Holy Spirit sent from heaven. The Christian

Prophets were the mouthpiece of the Spirit¹, insomuch that when they spoke under His influence the Spirit is said to have spoken. Their words were coloured, it is true, by individual character or by circumstances, and they were responsible for the manner in which they exercised the prophetic gift; in matter of fact it was not always used wisely or well². But so far as they were effective instruments for the building up of the Church or the conversion of unbelievers³, this was due to the Spirit of prophecy—a gift entrusted to the prophetic order and not common to the whole body of believers⁴.
Of the reality of this gift and of its generally beneficial results the New Testament writers entertain no doubt⁵.

In comparison with these directly spiritual ministries the local office-bearers of the several Churches occupied an inferior place: thirdly teachers, then...helps, governments. They were appointed, it appears, by the Apostle or his deputy⁶, who selected grave and trustworthy persons, capable of serving their brethren and presiding over the local congregation, but not necessarily possessing any special gift of the Spirit such as the power of prophesying or speaking with tongues. The elder or overseer did not always possess even the gift of teaching; it was desirable that he should be apt to teach¹, but this was not indispensable. Systematic teaching in the first age was probably left almost entirely in the hands of the Apostle, the Prophet, and the Evangelist; the college of elders was rather concerned with the business and the discipline of the society which it ruled². Yet even under these conditions St Paul held that the presbyters or bishops of the local communities derived their authority from the Holy Spirit: take heed to yourselves, and to all the flock in which the Holy Spirit (τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον) appointed you overseers (ἐπισκόπους). The words may refer to the solemn ceremony of ordination described in the Epistles to Timothy³, and the prophesyings by which it seems to have been preceded. The prophets, speaking in the Spirit, appear to have taken an important part in the choice of fit persons for certain ministries⁴, and the appointment of overseers may have been controlled by their judgement; in that case it would be attributed to the Holy Spirit itself⁵. But besides this it cannot be doubted that a special charisma accompanied the laying on of hands by which the presbyters were set apart for their ministry—not necessarily the gift of prophecy, but one which was more needful for their office, a spirit of power and love and discipline, such as fitted them for the difficult duties of ruling and guiding the primitive Churches in the midst of the heathen society from which they had but recently escaped.

4. But the reason for the association of the Christian Ministry with the Holy Spirit lies deeper than this. If we allow ourselves to think of the early Church merely as a human society, a collegium among the many collegia or guilds of the Empire—an aspect which it doubtless wore in the eyes of its pagan contemporaries—its rulers may well seem to have needed no more than a good natural capacity for business and for leadership. But the Christian society as it is seen in the New Testament has another character which belongs only to itself. It is the house of God, the congregation of the living God, pillar and basement of the truth. Such a view of the Church naturally affects our estimate of the ministry of the Church. The officers of a spiritual body are charged with spiritual work, and need spiritual power to do it. To remit and retain sins is the mission of the Church, and the Lord, who knew the extreme difficulty of this most exacting of tasks, endowed her for it with a special gift of ‘Holy Spirit¹.’ But the Church’s duty in this respect is chiefly fulfilled, at least since the end of the Apostolic age, by the three orders of the regular ministry, and the Easter gift of the Spirit goes with this exercise of responsibility. On these grounds the Western Church was justified when it ordered the use of Accipe Spiritum sanctum at all ordinations to the diaconate¹, the presbyterate, and the episcopate; and the Anglican Church when it followed the Latin Church so far as to retain the words at the Ordering of Priests and the Consecration of Bishops, adding on both occasions the solemn invocation of the Holy Spirit in the hymn Veni Creator Spiritus.

5. The few and simple rites of primitive Christianity are represented in the New Testament as spiritual acts, effectual signs of the life of the Spirit of Christ, and therefore instinct with the powers of the world to come. When the Lord spoke to Nicodemus of a birth from above² by which men were born of water and spirit, He struck a keynote which Christian experience took up and worked into a doctrine of baptismal grace. The event shewed that in Christian Baptism the outward visible sign was indeed accompanied by an inward spiritual power. Men who as heathens had been defiled by the worst vices of Greek life, in baptism washed themselves clean, were sanctified and justified³ in the name of the Lord Jesus and in the Spirit of our God. The Bridegroom of the Church sanctified and cleansed His Bride with the washing¹ of the baptismal water accompanied by a form of solemn words. God of His mercy saved men by the washing of a second birth and a renewal² of their nature wrought by the Holy Spirit. Baptism saved them, not the external use of water, but that reawakening of the conscience to the call of God³ which the Resurrection of the Lord had brought through the gift of the Spirit in the sacramental act. The completion of the ceremony of baptism by the laying on of hands shed a yet clearer light upon the working of the Holy Spirit through the ministries of the Church. Even Simon of Samaria could see that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Spirit was given, for external effects followed this act in the first age⁴. Lastly, the Eucharist, if not expressly associated in the New Testament with the Holy Spirit, is represented as a series of spiritual acts which are inconceivable apart from the Spirit's presence and operation. A cup of mingled wine and water, blessed by the ministers of the Church, becomes to those who drink of it a participation in the Blood of Christ⁵. A cake of bread, similarly blessed and broken, becomes to those who eat of it a participation in the Body of Christ. This identification of the Cup and the Bread with the sacrificed humanity of the Lord is so complete, so truly a fact in the spiritual world, that to eat and drink unworthily is to incur the guilt of profaning the Lord's Body and to attract such Divine chastisements as sickness and death¹. But these accounts of the spiritual significance of the Eucharist seem to involve the intervention of the Spirit of God, who alone can make material substances or human acts spiritually efficacious. In the words of a great Church writer of the second century, a diligent student of the New Testament, the Eucharist 'consists of two things, an earthly and a heavenly².' If so, the heavenly thing in it must be due to the Divine Spirit; and it was doubtless the recognition of this truth that led the early composers of liturgies to invoke the Holy Spirit on the elements as well as on the communicants. The Epiclesis is an acknowledgement of the Spirit's work in the highest act of Christian worship.

The teaching of the New Testament on the relation of the Holy Spirit to the ministry of the Church is admirably summarized in the *Ecclesiastical Polity*³. "We have (writes Richard Hooker) for the least and meanest duties performed by virtue of ministerial power that to dignify, grace, and authorize them which no other offices on earth can challenge. Whether we preach, pray, baptize, communicate, condemn, give absolution, or whatsoever, as disposers of God's mysteries, our words, judgements, acts, and deeds are not our own but the Holy Ghost's." The words are cast in a mould shaped by the exigencies of an age far removed from Apostolic times, but the main thought which breathes in them is one which underlies all that the New Testament teaches about the Christian ministry. It is a ministry of the Spirit, and whatever spiritual power it exerts is from the Spirit who, dwelling in the Body of Christ, makes His presence felt in the acts and words of those who fulfil its work¹.

¹ It was a fine saying of Bp George Ridding (Life, p. 241): "God's magnet is a man of God electrified by the Spirit of God." This is true in the highest degree of the priest whose heart is in his work. But "the effect of Christ's ordinance" is not taken away by the wickedness or insincerity of the minister; as the Anglican article (xxvi) rightly insists, the Sacraments are "effectual because of Christ's institution and promise." The Spirit of Christ works in such cases through the acts of evil men, since they are done in Christ's name and by His authority.

V.

Part III. v.

I. 'SPIRIT' suggests 'inspiration,' and it would not have been surprising if the idea of inspiration and the word itself had been common in the New Testament, which speaks so constantly of the Spirit. But the word does not occur, and the idea occurs but seldom. In John iii. 8 there is a play upon the two senses of πνεῦμα, wind or breath and spirit, which might have been maintained and widely used; but it is dropped at once and is rarely found again either in the Gospels or in the Epistles. There is a reference to it in the act of breathing which accompanied the Easter gift of the Spirit, and in the wind that filled the house where the Church was assembled at the Pentecost. But when a metaphor is wanted, it is usually borrowed not from wind but from water; partly because the latter figure had been employed by the prophets of the Old Testament, partly from the association of the Spirit with the baptismal rite. The New Testament speaks of an effusion (ἐκχυσις) of the Spirit rather than of an inspiration (ἐνπνευσις) of men or their works by it; the latter word, although used by the LXX.¹, is not once found in the Apostolic writings. When the Spirit is regarded as a power which works in the human mind or heart, it is not said to 'inspire,' but to 'fill' men as with new wine; or to 'dwell in' them as in a sanctuary. Such phrases as 'the inspiration of good thoughts,' and 'the cleansing of the thoughts through the inspiration of the Holy Spirit,' familiar as they are to us through the English Prayerbook and the Latin sacramentaries which lie behind the collects of the Prayerbook, are unknown to the New Testament. On two occasions, however, it appears to speak of the inspiration of the prophets and their writings in the sense which the term bears in popular theology. Of one of these passages little need be said here; in 2 Peter i. 21, where the Prophets are said to have spoken as they were borne along (φερόμενοι, Vulg. inspirati) by the Holy Spirit, the idea conveyed is not so much inspiration as rapture; the Wind of God carries men before it so that they go where they are driven. But in 2 Tim. iii. 16 the divinitus inspirata of the Latin versions is justified by the Greek (θεόπνευστος). On the other hand the rendering of our Authorized version "all scripture is given by inspiration of God," a phrase which is largely responsible for the use of the word inspiration among English-speaking Christians, is too dogmatic in form: "every scripture inspired of God," as the Revised version translates, is doubtless right, and the difference is material. The writer does not assert the inspiration of all

Part III. v. scripture, but that every scripture which is inspired is also profitable. His purpose is to teach not the inspiration of the Old Testament scriptures but their use. In what sense they are inspired, and whether their inspiration is such as to protect them from error, we are not taught, but only for what ends they were given. It is interesting to note that the first two of those ends correspond with two of the functions fulfilled by the Paraclete; He came in person, as He had come through the Hebrew prophets, to teach and to convince (πρὸς διδασκαλίαν, πρὸς ἐλεγμόν)¹. The field of the Spirit's work under the Old Testament was limited, but it bore fruit which is in part at least identical with that which we are taught to connect with the mission of the Spirit of Christ.

2. Though it is only in 2 Timothy that inspiration is directly ascribed to the Old Testament scriptures, there can be no doubt that belief in this inspiration was shared by all the leaders of the Apostolic Church, who quote the Old Testament as a final authority or as the word of God. The same attitude seems to be attributed to our Lord in more than one of His arguments with the Jews², and in the direct teaching of the Sermon on the Mount³. It is not indeed easy to determine how far the use of the argumentum ad hominem should be held to account for the former class of passages; and what is said in the Sermon

as to the permanence of the Law must certainly be interpreted in the light of other sayings in the same context which modify or set aside things that were said to them of old time. However, it is certain that our Lord did not protest against the prevalent belief in the inspiration of the Old Testament¹ as He did against other Pharisaic doctrines, but rather on the whole lent His sanction to some form of it. The Old Testament is the court of appeal before which He summons the false traditions of the Scribes²; the touchstone by which He tries the suggestions of the Tempter³; the treasury of devotion upon which He draws even in the hour of death⁴. It is written is His final justification of courses of action, the ground on which He bases principles⁵. All the things that have been written about Himself in the Law of Moses and the Prophets and the Psalms must needs be fulfilled. Utterances of this kind shew that our Lord did not disallow the popular estimate of the Old Testament, but on the contrary to some extent endorsed it, handing it on to His Church as one of the elementary credenda of Christianity. And such it continued to be. There was some danger, it appears, of Christian prophecy being despised, but none of its superseding the Part III. v. prophecy of the Old Covenant. The older prophecy was regarded as written for the instruction and consolation of the Christian Church¹; the Hebrew prophets were moved by the Spirit of Christ which was in them², and thus were able to predict the sufferings and the glory destined for the Christ. The ancient Catholic Church rightly voiced the mind of the Apostolic age when she taught her children to confess their faith in "the Holy Spirit ...who spake by the prophets³." The omission of any reference to the work of the Paraclete in the present creed of Christendom may be regretted, but it makes the mention of the Old Testament prophets the more significant. No words in the Catholic Creed are more certainly primitive than these.

3. When the Apostolic writers refer to 'inspired Scripture' or to 'the sacred writings,' they mean the books of the Hebrew Canon. There is an apparent exception in 2 Peter iii. 16, where the Petrine author writes: Our beloved brother Paul according to the wisdom given to him wrote to you ...in all his epistles...in which there are some things hard to understand, which the untaught and unstable torture, as they do the rest of the scriptures (τὰς assuming that the rest of the scriptures are the scriptures of the Old Testament¹, it is evident that this writer places the Epistles of St Paul as a body of writings on a level with the Canon. But there is no other trace in Christian literature of such a view before the end of the first quarter of the second century, and its appearance in 2 Peter excites a suspicion of the genuineness of this Epistle which is strengthened by other considerations. The case against the Epistle is indeed so strong that notwithstanding its inclusion in the New Testament by the judgement of the fourth and fifth centuries

 Apostolic age².

Putting 2 Peter on one side, what claim to inspiration is made in the New Testament on behalf of the Apostolic writings?

There is no indication that any of the writers of the New Testament was conscious of contributing to a second canon of inspired scriptures. No ulterior purpose of creating a Christian literature or of ministering to the spiritual needs of posterity appears on the surface of the books³. It is a Part III. v. somewhat different question how far, while writing letters and books which were designed to meet the immediate wants of individuals or churches, they were conscious of being assisted by the Holy Spirit. The prophets of the Old Testament knew themselves to be the subjects of a Divine afflatus. In the New Testament only one book—the Apocalypse—is directly prophetic, and there the claim to inspiration is made as distinctly as in the prophecies of Ezekiel and Zechariah¹. The Epistles of St Paul are not formal prophecies, but they contain the substance of Divine revelations²: the writer has experienced ecstatic visions and has heard unspeakable words: some of his teachings are based upon a word of the Lord, perhaps a personal revelation; now and again he has a mystery, a Divine secret, to communicate³. St Paul thinks that he, as well as certain others, has the Spirit of God⁴: he knows that he has the mind of Christ; he is an Apostle of Jesus Christ and speaks with the authority of his office. His letters are to be read in the Churches and obeyed; the prophet or spiritual person who seeks recognition must first acknowledge that the things which Paul writes to the Church are the commandment of the Lord⁵. Yet he is conscious that some of the counsels he gives do not fall under that category, and when he would establish a doctrine he does not support it by authority but by argument. Certainly he does not claim that all he writes is protected from error, or that all is equally or uniformly inspired. Part III. v.

The historical books of the New Testament from the nature of their contents shew fewer signs of spiritual influence exerted upon their writers. They deal not with revelations but with facts, which could be collected and verified by the ordinary processes of memory or research. If inspiration was needed by the writers of the Synoptic Gospels and the Acts, it was needed to guide them in selecting their materials wisely with a view to the edification of the Church; and of such guidance they may well have been unconscious. The promise that the Paraclete would recall to memory the words of Christ found its fulfilment in the Apostolic preaching and in the oral tradition of the first age rather than in the written Gospels which are based upon them. St Luke writes as if he had depended entirely upon his own researches; and if St Luke and the writer of the first Gospel had St Mark before them, as is now commonly supposed, they certainly treated the second Gospel with a freedom which suggests that they did not recognize it as inspired scripture. But while this is freely admitted, it must not be forgotten that the Gospels and the Acts are, even more than the 'Former Prophets' of the Old Testament, didactic histories, and in purpose didactic rather than historical; books, therefore, in which the voice of the Spirit may be heard, teaching by

Part III. v. their words the whole Church to the end of time. In this sense a prophetic character and a prophetic inspiration may be claimed for writings such as St Mark's Gospel and the Acts; if spiritual profit marks the presence of inspiration¹, it is to be found everywhere in the New Testament, and not least in the histories which tell us all that we know of the life of our Lord and of the beginnings of the Church. As for the Gospel of St John, it is perhaps an interpretation of the life and teaching of Jesus rather than a formal history; but it is an interpretation which exhibits the Lord's person and work in the light of the Spirit, and thus it possesses a claim to inspiration of a high order, although the claim is not made by the writer, and he may have been unconscious of his gift.

4. Of the nature and effects of Inspiration the writers of the New Testament say but little. In quoting the prophecies of the Old Testament they use the customary formulas of citation. The words were spoken through the prophet, or more precisely by the Lord through the prophet. In the Psalms David spoke in the Holy Spirit, or God spoke by the Holy Spirit through the mouth of David. The inspiration of the Prophet is transferred to his writings, and the writing is sometimes personified. The Scripture, we read, foreseeing that God would justify the Gentiles through faith, preached the Gospel beforehand unto Abraham, where the meaning clearly is that the Holy Spirit foresaw the issue when He spoke to Abraham as the Scripture relates; the Scripture shut up all things under sin, i.e. God did this through the Scripture. The Scripture says, or What says the Scripture? is St Paul's familiar form of appeal to the Old Testament. In all such modes of speech the written word is regarded as a standing witness to the mind and will of God, who speaks through it in virtue of the inspiration of the writers. Much the same inference may be drawn from the constant occurrence in the New Testament of the formula *It is written*¹. All this seems to shew that the Apostolic age turned to the Old Testament as a written record of God's dealings with Israel, when it wished to obtain indications of the principle upon which He governs His people. It evidently realized that every part of this record had its warnings, its consolations, or its teachings for the new Israel, and that this abiding voice of the Spirit was not to be neglected even by a generation which was conscious of having received a far larger outpouring of life and light; that on the contrary, the coming of the Paraclete had reinterpreted the ancient Scriptures and made them valuable allies of the Church in her work of evangelizing the world.

5. As the Apostolic age appealed to the Old Testament, so the next age or the next but one, while maintaining the primitive estimate of the Hebrew Canon, naturally looked with growing reverence to the writings of the Apostles and Apostolic men, and

Part III.v. began to see in them a new collection of inspired Scriptures. For this the New Testament, as we have seen, is not directly responsible. Nevertheless there was solid ground for the attitude of the Church towards these writings. The anointing which teaches all things and is true, the Spirit which came to guide believers into all the truth, could not have failed to guide and teach in an especial degree those leaders of the Church to whom it was given to shape the first beginnings of Christian life and thought. The Spirit which moved a David or an Isaiah could not have failed to move a Paul or a John. Their writings and others such as theirs are permanent records of the highest teaching which the Paraclete gave to the first generation. Men who lived at so critical an era, under such direct and constant guidance, were, we cannot doubt, as fully inspired as the prophets and teachers of the older Israel. A long experience has confirmed the judgement of the second and third centuries which ascribed to the New Testament the same inspiration that its writers attribute to the Old.

But if the Apostolic writers were inspired men, we may safely apply to their writings what St Paul has said of the ancient scriptures. They, too, were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of these Apostolic scriptures might have hope. They are profitable for teaching, for conviction, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness, that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work. It is in the practical use of the Old and New Testaments that their inspiration appears. Inspiration is not defined in Scripture, and the Church has shewn a wise self-restraint in refusing to enter upon this ground. But no Christian who makes the prophetic and Apostolic writings the guide of his religious thinking and daily living will doubt that there is a true sense in which these books stand alone as a Divine library. Full as they are of the personal characteristics and infirmities of their human authors, they are also full, according to their several measures, of the wisdom and power of the Spirit of God and of Christ. The human element in the written word coexists with the Divine after a manner inscrutable to our comprehension. It is so in the mystery of the Christian life; it is so, to take the highest instance, in the mystery of the Word made flesh. We believe, we experience the truth of the union, and it is enough.

THE SPIRIT AND THE PERSONAL LIFE.

vi.

WITH one or two possible exceptions the Old Testament makes no reference to the ethical action of the Spirit of God upon the individual man¹; the Hebrew writers view the Spirit in relation to Israel, the Messiah, and the prophetic order. Nor do the Synoptic Gospels carry us much further², for the baptism of the personal life by the Spirit of Christ did not begin till the Ministry was ended; Jo. vii. 39. the Spirit was not yet. Even Acts scarcely enters upon this field; by its scope the book is nearly limited to the effects of the Spirit's coming upon the Church and the world. It is St Paul to whom the honour belongs of having called attention to the change which the Pentecost made in the possibilities of the individual human life; the Pauline Epistles which exhibit the relation of the Spirit to the Body of Christ are not less full of its workings in the members of the Body. St Paul was followed herein by other teachers of the Apostolic age, and especially by St John, who late in the first century, in the light of a long experience, recalled and reinterpreted sayings in which the Lord had foreshadowed the work of the Spirit in the hearts of men.

1. (a) In the earliest of St Paul's Epistles an insight is given into his psychology which supplies a starting-point for the doctrine of the Spirit's relation to human nature. Man in his completeness consists of body, soul, and spirit. It is doubtless true that no actual trichotomy is contemplated here¹, but there is at least a mental distinction made between three elements in our nature which are regarded as necessary to its perfection. Of the 'soul' in connexion with our present subject the Apostle says little, except that he applies the epithet 'psychic' to men who are not under the control of the Spirit of God, and to the body in its present condition, 'psychic' being in both instances contrasted with 'pneumatic' or spiritual. Of the human spirit, on the other hand, frequent mention is made in the Epistles; it is evidently the sphere in which the ethical work of the Holy Spirit is carried forward². Elsewhere that work is connected with the 'inward man'³, i.e. the true self; or with the 'spirit of the mind'⁴, i.e. the spiritual nature on the side of the intellectual powers; or again with the 'conscience'⁵.

1 Cor. ii.

(b) The Holy Spirit does not create the 'spirit' in man; it is potentially present in every man, even if rudimentary and undeveloped. Every human being has affinities with the spiritual and eternal. In each individual of the race the spirit of the man which is in him answers to the Spirit of God, in so far as the finite can correspond with the infinite; though there are men who are psychic and not spiritual, who may even be said not to 'have spirit¹,' human nature is incomplete without it, and vainly seeks satisfaction in sensual or even in intellectual enjoyment². But though the Spirit of God finds in man a spiritual nature on which it can work, the human spirit is in so imperfect or depraved a condition that a complete renovation, even a re-creation, is necessary. If any is in Christ, there has been in his case a new creation; the old things passed away; behold, they have become new. St Paul describes in his letters the process of renovation as he had himself witnessed it in the lives of thousands of Gentile converts.

(c) If a moment is named at which the change began or an act in which it was potentially included, that moment and that act are identified with the admission of the convert into the Church by baptism³ into the death and Resurrection of the Lord Jesus. In the act of Baptism the 'old man,' i.e. the former self, was crucified together with the Lord, that a new self, a risen Christ, might take its place within him. It was his palingenesia, his second birth, his renovation by the Spirit of Christ¹, giving the promise of a new life. The baptized man might by his subsequent conduct grieve the Holy Spirit², outrage Him³, and even extinguish the Divine fire in his heart⁴; but from that moment he could never again be in the position of one to whom the Spirit had not come; he had been made partaker of Holy Spirit, and had tasted the good word of God and the powers of the coming age. From that moment, with that great sacramental act, the life of the Spirit⁵ began.

(d) The life of the Spirit, as it proceeds, encounters a hostile force which St Paul calls the Flesh, and the history of the Christian life is the history of a lifelong war: the flesh lusts against the Spirit and the Spirit against the flesh, for these powers are opposed to one another. The flesh in this antithesis is neither human nature as such, nor the corporeal and external as contrasted with the spiritual and invisible, nor even the seat of the passions which make for sin, but human nature regarded as fallen and sinful, corrupt and morally decaying; the precise opposite in man of the principle of life which is communicated by the Spirit of God. In view of this antinomy men fall into two categories, those who are 'in flesh,' and those who are 'in Spirit'; or, having regard to the practical working of the two conditions, those who live or walk 'after flesh,' and those who live or walk 'after Spirit.' Neither class pursues its course without resistance from the opposite force, but St Paul takes cognizance only of the struggle which the Spirit makes in baptized men against the principle of spiritual death. As the Spirit gains upon the flesh, there grows up within a man the 'mind of the Spirit,' an attitude of thought and will which changes the direction of the inner life, inclining it to the Divine and the eternal. There follows a corresponding change of the standards and habits of outward conduct; those who live by the Spirit are bound to live after its rule. From this high ground St Paul is able to attack with absolute confidence the sensuality, the flippant levity, the gross vices of heathendom which still threatened the Gentile churches; such things were impossible for men who had put away the old man and were being renewed in the power of the Holy Spirit, which had now become the very 'spirit of their minds.' To live by the Spirit, to walk by the Spirit, this was the one safeguard against relapsing into the lusts of the flesh².

the flesh, or a defensive power shielding it from attack. Stoicism, as interpreted by Seneca and Epicetus¹, was able to go some way in this direction. St Paul opens another door of hope; his indwelling Spirit is also a constructive power which builds up a new life within, cooperating with the spirit of man in the work of restoring human life to the image of God. The Holy Spirit "sanctifieth me and all the elect people of God." Perhaps the familiar words have led English Christians to think of the Holy Spirit too exclusively as the Sanctifier, a character which in the New Testament is not uniformly ascribed to the Third Person in God². Yet whenever the Apostolic writers speak of the members of the Church as 'saints' or 'sanctified,' the Spirit's work is implicitly in view. No one term, indeed, so fully covers the effects upon human nature of the presence in it of the Holy Spirit of God as the word 'sanctification.' It expresses at once the hallowing or consecration to the service of God which is the first result of the coming of the Spirit, and the actual equipment for service of each of the faculties of men. In the former sense the change is merely one of relation and non-moral; thus even the body receives consecration from the Divine indwelling³,

² The chief passages are Rom. xv. 16, 1 Cor. vi. 11, 2 Thess. ii. 13, 1 Pet. i. 2. In other places, perhaps more numerous, sanctification is connected with our relation to Jesus Christ; see 1 Cor. i. 1, 30; Eph. v. 26, Heb. ii. 11, x. 10, 29, xiii. 12.

Part III. and a heathen who has married a Christian woman
 — vi. is sanctified by the union¹. But the progressive sanctification which follows the act of Baptism is of another kind; and though St Paul does not often use the term, the steps of this great spiritual process are described by him at length.

Rom. viii.
 iv. 6.

(f) The Holy Spirit enables the members of Christ to realize their consecration by creating in them a sense of their filial relation to God, and opening and maintaining communication between God and the individual life. The Spirit in the human heart is 'the spirit of the adoption' which corresponds with the spirit of sonship in the Christ, and cries in us as in Him Abba, Father. It is through the Christ that we have our access to the Father², but we have it in the Spirit. If we worship the Father in spirit and in truth, we do so by the Spirit of God³. If we pray, it is the Spirit who supports our weaknesses, and inspires those unuttered and unutterable longings after the Divine which God recognizes as the voice of His Spirit and in accordance with His will⁴.

Having thus reopened fellowship between God and the human spirit, the Holy Spirit builds up the ruins of our spiritual nature, restoring the Divine life in man. The love of God is poured into the heart, awakening a response of love on man's part to God⁵; hope, peace, and joy follow in the region

of the spirit¹. Another powerful instrument of sanctification is the knowledge of Divine truth as it is learnt in the experience of the Christian life; and this also is in the hands of the Holy Spirit, who is the teacher of all Christians, and without whose instruction the things of God have no reality or convincing power². In order to utter with sincerity and conviction the shortest of Christian creeds a man must have been taught by the Spirit of Christ³. Truth thus imparted to the mind is a power in life which makes for righteousness and holiness of truth, and is not a mere part of its intellectual furniture⁴. Words of God thus put by the Spirit into the hands of men are swords by which home-thrusts may be dealt at His enemy and ours⁵.

Part III.

(g) If the apostle is asked to specify the results of this work of sanctification, his answer is ready; the *fruit of the Spirit*⁶ is the Christian character in its manifoldness, and in its unity. He names nine great products of life in the Spirit. When this list is scrutinized it is found to include the most characteristic features of practical Christianity, as it was exhibited in the first age. The list begins with those which indicate the attitude of the inner self to God, for the Spirit first creates right relations between the soul and God, and from these it proceeds to remodel personal and social life. As St Paul saw the religion of the Spirit, it not only filled men with love, joy, and peace, but it surrounded them with an atmosphere of forbearance, kindness, goodness, honesty of purpose, ability to endure affront, and self-control. That such a character should have been realized even in part within a generation after the coming of the Spirit, in the midst of heathen surroundings, and in the lives of men who had recently escaped from heathenism, went far to establish the Divine authority of the Gospel—further indeed than the greatest of physical miracles. God, it was evident, had set His seal on men who manifested such signs of a supernatural life, some of which could be seen by all observers. To use another Pauline metaphor, they were an open letter of Christ, which all the world could read, written with the Spirit of the living God.

(h) For the life of the Spirit of Christ in the individual believer is the very life of Christ in him, reproducing the character of Christ by 'forming Christ'¹ within his heart. He that is joined to the Lord is one spirit; there is a spiritual unity between Christ and himself, of which the human spirit is the sphere, and the Spirit of Christ the author. The indwelling of the Spirit is the indwelling of Christ; and Christ, dwelling in the heart by the Spirit, becomes the life of our lives. I live, and yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me. If Christ is in you...the spirit is life because of righteousness. It is thus that

vi.

2. Our other great New Testament authority on the life of the Holy Spirit in the individual is St John. His interpretation of the teaching of Christ may be coloured more or less deeply by the experience of the sixty years or more which had intervened between the coming of the Spirit and the date of the fourth Gospel. But the theology of St John is at least not a mere replica of the Pauline theology, in regard either to the Son or to the Holy Spirit. While there are points of resemblance between them which imply a common basis of belief, minor differences both of presentation and of detail suggest that the writers lived at different stages in the growth of the Christian consciousness, and differed in their outlook upon the field of Christian thought¹. Eph. iii.

(a) Like St Paul, St John recognizes that the work of the Spirit in the personal life begins with a spiritual birth which is connected with the water of Baptism. But the conception is worked out independently. It is true that we have in St John as in St Paul the antithesis of flesh and Spirit: that which has been born of the flesh is flesh, and that which has been born of the Spirit is spirit; but the flesh is here the symbol not of moral corruption, but of the external and animal side of human nature. The lower animal life can only propagate itself by natural birth; the higher life must be derived from Jo. iii. 6;

the Spirit by a birth from above. The fundamental thought connected with the Spirit's action in the first half of the fourth Gospel is not, as with St Paul, burial with Christ, or cleansing from sin, but rather the origination, the satisfaction, the preservation of life. It is the Spirit which regenerates: which as living water, issuing from the Christ¹, allays the thirst of men and becomes in them a perennial fountain of life which overflows for the quickening or the refreshment of all that it can reach. So the Lord foreshadowed, or the Evangelist interpreting His words by the event expressed, the effect of the Pentecostal outpouring of the Spirit: the new life which sprang up in the hearts of believers, its freshness, its brightness and joy, its unfailing supply, the law of self-extension which it invariably follows. The Acts are full of the workings of this law; each believer in the first days became a centre of spiritual life. St Paul's whole life was shaped by his recognition of the fact, but it is to St John that we owe the sayings of our Lord which explain it. The energies of the indwelling Spirit of Christ can no more be limited to the individual life than a perennial fountain can be held in by narrow barriers. Spiritual life communicates itself from person to person as torch is lit from torch.

(b) It is, however, only in a secondary sense that either the individual believer or the Church communicates the Spirit. The water of life, through its vital energy, springs up within the personal life and overflows in acts and words which minister spiritual life to other men; a whole household, a whole region may owe its conversion to God to the personal influence which is itself due to the power of the indwelling Spirit of Christ. But in the last resort it is from Christ and not from the individual members of Christ that the water of life proceeds; both the original gift and the perennial supply are from Him who baptizes with the Holy Spirit. Thus the personal life of all believers depends upon the incarnate Lord. Each human being that receives the Holy Spirit receives it by the gift of Christ. The mystery of the Incarnation, the Sacrifice, the Resurrection and Ascension, the glorification of the Word made flesh, lies behind every manifestation of the Spirit in the words and actions of men. The anointing which teaches the most ignorant as man cannot teach is from the Holy One who Himself was anointed by the Father. The life which springs up in the depths of the most degraded personality, and makes the desert to rejoice and blossom as the rose, issues out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. The Spirit of Christ is on earth and in the hearts of men because Christ is at the Father's right hand in heaven¹.

VII.

THE SPIRIT AND THE LIFE TO COME.

Part III.

I. IT is unnecessary to enter here upon the large and thorny field of New Testament Eschatology. For our purpose it is enough to know that the Apostolic writings recognize everywhere that there is a state beyond death in which the spiritual life is continued under new and more favourable conditions. In the Synoptic teaching of our Lord to 'enter into' or 'inherit' this life (ἡ ζωή, ζωὴ αἰώνιος) is set forth as the highest aim of man¹. In the Johannine discourses 'eternal life' is a constantly recurring phrase², and although the believer is said to 'have' this life by having Christ Himself, and thus to have already made the great transition from death to life³, it belongs in its fulness to another stage of existence which begins with what is called the 'resurrection of life' (ἀνάστασις ζωῆς)⁴. The Epistles of the New Testament distinguish yet more clearly between the initial spiritual life of the present state and its perfection in the future. The end is eternal life; he who sows to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap eternal life. There is a 'life to come' (ζωὴ ἡ μέλλουσα) of which godliness has promise; it is hidden now but will be manifested at the Parousia; it is the crown of life which the Lord promised to them that love him. Even the state of the dead members of Christ holds something far better than their present life in Him¹. But it is the fuller life to be disclosed at the coming of the Lord which is the heritage² of Christians, their land of promise, their birthright as the sons of God³. This is the glory which is to be revealed, the eternal weight of glory which must be placed in the scale against present loss; the wealth of glory belonging to God's inheritance in the saints; the unfading crown of glory which is to be placed upon their heads.

What place does the New Testament assign to the Holy Spirit in this mature and perfected life? Is the work of the Spirit preparatory only, ceasing with death or the Parousia, or is it permanent, extending to the world to come?

2. All that has been said makes for the real continuity of the spiritual life in the future order. Physical death has no power over the life of the Spirit;

the Lord's return will manifest the sons of God, but it cannot change their relation to Him. But if neither death nor life...nor things present nor things to come...can separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord, it is inconceivable that they can separate us from the Spirit of God and of Christ, by which the love of God has been shed abroad in our hearts, and which is the very bond of our union with God through Christ. Nor are we left to a mere inference. The present indwelling of the Spirit is the firstfruits of the harvest, the first instalment of the inheritance. But the harvest is homogeneous with the firstfruits, and the inheritance with the instalment. Both metaphors clearly teach that the life of the world to come will be, as our present life in Christ is, a life in the Spirit, although immeasurably larger, fuller, and more abiding. The gift of the Spirit which is ours now is 'in part'; the great promise of the Father awaits its complete fulfilment in a future state.

3. It is possible to examine more closely the contents of this hope so far as it affects the future of the body. In the present state, while the spirit is life because of righteousness, the body is dead because of sin. It fails to respond to the already emancipated spirit, and indeed chains and drags it down. Quis liberabit? is the constant cry of the spirit as it groans under the body of this death. The Gospel recognized the burdens of life and did not profess to set men free from them. It discouraged the pagan practice of suicide, counselling brave endurance of suffering, and dwelling on its disciplinary purpose. Nor did it offer a prospect of release from the body in a future life. Not the destruction of the body but its liberation was the hope which it held forth to the world. Human nature is to be perfected not by the abandonment of one of its factors, but by the emancipation of the whole man; humanity is to be preserved in its entirety for the coming Christ¹. And the emancipation of the body is attributed to the same Spirit which has regenerated the spiritual nature of men. If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwells in you, he that raised up Christ Jesus from the dead shall quicken also your mortal bodies through his Spirit that dwells in you. But a quickening of the body by the Spirit of the risen Christ cannot be a mere resuscitation of the flesh. There can be no return to the unspiritual conditions of mortality: flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God. The Spirit which quickens will change; the body shall be raised not 'psychic' but 'pneumatic,' an organ of the highest life, a sacrament of the Spirit's presence, an instrument to carry out His inspirations.

4. Thus the resurrection of the body is so far from being the last work of the indwelling Spirit that it will be the starting point of a new activity of spiritual life. It was in order to bring human nature to this point that the Spirit regenerated and renewed it, bearing with the limitations and the sins which beset the process of its recovery; and it is not to

 work of His own hand. The New Testament does not indeed enter in detail into the life of the world to come; it is sufficiently occupied with the work of claiming for God the life that now is. But such indications as it gives confirm us in the belief that the Spirit's presence in human nature is not to be withdrawn when that which is perfect has come.
 1 Cor. xiii. 10. The water of life springs up into eternal life, not which the first century was conscious are recognized

 New Testament about the life to come. The Apocalypse places its reader side by side with the seer before the open door of heaven, and permits him to see things which must come to pass hereafter. Two of its great outlooks into the future refer to the Spirit under St John's usual symbol, as the Water of Life. In the vision of ch. vii. we read: They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, neither shall the sun strike upon them, nor any heat; for the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall be their shepherd, and shall guide them unto fountains of waters of life. The double plural (πηγὰς ὑδάτων) suggests the indefinite multiplication of the reservoirs of spiritual life which are opened to refresh and finally to satisfy the thirst after God and righteousness. The glorified Christ is represented as Himself guiding the saints, as if He had taken into His own hands again the work which had been committed to the Paraclete-Spirit¹. Yet though the mission of the Paraclete as the Vicar of Jesus Christ has come to an end, He is seen to be still the giver of spiritual life; if the Lamb now leads in person, He leads to ever fresh supplies of the Spirit, fountains of waters of life, means of grace hitherto unknown or inaccessible, but open to those who are accounted worthy to attain to that world. The same view of the Spirit's place in the life to come is given, with slight differences, in the vision of the New Jerusalem. He shewed me a river of water of life, bright as crystal,

the tree of life bearing twelve manner of fruits,

 said that this is a picture of the Christian Society in the world, the Catholic Church in which the Spirit already dwells; for have we not already come
 Heb. xii. unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God,
 22. the heavenly Jerusalem? are not the River of Life and the Tree of Life already in our midst? Yet St John's vision is certainly not exhausted by present experience. It is the ideal City which he sees, and though the Church strives to realize the vision, she fails age after age, for in its fulness it belongs to the perfect life. Meanwhile the vision witnesses to the continuity of the life of perfectness with the life of grace, and to the permanence of the great facts of the spiritual order. Nothing can be clearer than that the River of the Water of Life is one of these permanent features; whatever fulfilments it may find in the present mission of the Spirit, we are encouraged by the vision to believe that it will continue to fulfil itself in ages to come. Without its broad stream of crystal water flowing through its central street, and its great avenue of ever green, ever fruitbearing trees on either side of the river,
 the New Jerusalem would lack its most characteristic glory. The Church without the Spirit would cease to be the true City of God.

The River of Life is seen by St John proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. So he traces to its ultimate source both the present temporal mission of the Holy Spirit and His future work upon the spirits of the just made perfect. The whole flood of life which will, world without end, make glad the City of God, issues forth from the glorified humanity of the Incarnate Son. The throne on which He reigns with the Eternal Father is the exhaustless fountain-head from which the Spirit will be for ever poured into the hearts of the redeemed.

Here our view of New Testament teaching upon the Being and work of the Holy Spirit must end. The result of the whole enquiry has been to place before the mind not a doctrine but an experience. The Spirit has revealed itself to us in the history and life of the first age: in the ministry of the Forerunner and of the Lord, in the work of the primitive Church, in the witness of Apostolic teachers, especially of St Paul and St John. We have seen the Divine Energy, of which the Old Testament spoke as the Spirit of God, manifesting itself in new relations, and by new processes of spiritual life. It has been revealed as the Spirit of Christ, and the Spirit of the Body of Christ; it has made for itself a sanctuary in the heart of man, consecrating his whole being to the service of God, in whose image it has created him anew. The whole amazing picture is drawn for us by men who speak of what they knew and had seen in the life of the age which immediately followed the great day of Pentecost. If at any time they go beyond their personal knowledge, it is only to give expression to hopes which were justified by events which had occurred in their own day.

No age of the Church can depart fundamentally from this experience. The same Spirit inspires the whole Body to the end of time. But each age receives its own manifestation of the Spirit's presence. Loyalty to the Apostles' teaching and fellowship does not exclude readiness to follow the guidance of the Spirit of truth when it leads into paths which the first generation were not called to tread. The New Testament marks out the great lines of Christian truth which can never be changed; but it leaves to successive generations the task and the joy of pursuing them into new regions of thought and life, as the Divine Guide points the way.

THE DOVE AS A SYMBOL OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

All the Gospels relate that the descent of the Spirit on the newly baptized Christ was symbolized by the appearance of a bodily form (Lc. iii. 22) which resembled a dove (Mc. i. 10, Mt. iii. 16, Lc. loc., Jo. i. 32). Whether the dove was real or spectacular, it was clearly symbolical of the Spirit which henceforth rested on the humanity of the Lord.

What was the exact meaning of the symbol? Why was the dove chosen rather than some other symbol of the Spirit, such as water, fire, or wind?

In the O.T. the dove meets us in the story of the Flood (Gen. viii. 8 ff.), and in connexion with sacrificial rites (Gen. xv. 9, Lev. i. 14, &c.; cf. Lc. ii. 24, Mc. xi. 15). Its flight is the type of swiftness and beauty (Ps. lv. 6, lxxviii. 13); its gentleness and grace supplied the Eastern lover with an image for the person or the eyes of his beloved (Cant. i. 15, ii. 14, iv. 1, v. 2, 12, vi. 9). In other passages it seems to be used as a symbol of Israel, inoffensive and defenceless among the nations of the earth (Ps. lxxiv. 19, Hos. vii. 11, xi. 11). More than one ancient writer remarks upon the sacredness of the dove in Syria (Lucian, de Syria 54 περιστερὴ χρῆμα ἱρότατον καὶ οὐδὲ ψάλλειν αὐτῶν δικαιοῦσι: Tibullus i. 7 alba Palestino sancta columba Syro), but whether this feeling prevailed in Israel there is not sufficient evidence to shew.

Our Lord (Mt. x. 16) speaks of the dove as the embodiment of the harmlessness which was characteristic of His own human life (Heb. vii. 26; cf. Clem. Al. paed. i. 14), and ought to characterize His disciples.

Mr F. C. Conybeare (Expositor IX. ix. p. 454) has pointed out that Philo regards the dove as the symbol of the Divine Wisdom; the τρυγών is φιλέρημος, τὴν μόνωσιν ἀγαπῶσα, the περιστερά is ἡμερος, διαίτη τῇ μετὰ θνητῶν ἀσμενίζουσα, and Wisdom has both qualities. It is more than precarious to suppose that Philo influenced the Christian tradition of the Baptism. But it is possible that the association of the dove with Wisdom or the Holy Spirit was familiar to his generation, and if so, the choice of the symbol may be in some measure due to that circumstance.

But behind this or any other symbolism there probably lay the reference in Gen. i. 2 to the birdlike hovering of the Spirit of God over the waters of the chaos. At the Baptism the New Creation took its rise out of the waters of the Jordan; the Spirit of God again moved upon the face of the waters, bringing forth an ordered life. The form of the descending bird represented this great mystery; that the bird was a dove may be explained by the associations already mentioned.

For the use of the dove in early Christian art see Cabrol, Dictionnaire d'archéologie chrétienne fasc. XIII., col. 346 ff., where many illustrations are given.

HERETICAL SYSTEMS.

CERINTHUS according to Irenaeus (i. 26. 1) taught "post baptismum descendisse in eum [Iesum] ab ea principalitate quae est super omnia Christum figura columbae, et tunc annuntiasset incognitum Patrem et uirtutes perfecisse; in fine autem reuolasse iterum Christum de Iesu et Iesum passum esse et resurrexisse; Christum autem impassibilem perseuerasse, existentem spiritalem" (cf. Hippolytus, phil. vii. 33). Similarly Epiphanius (i. 28. 1): Cerinthus held μετὰ τὸ ἀδρυνθῆναι τὸν Ἰησοῦν τὸν ἐκ σπέρματος Ἰωσήφ καὶ Μαρίας γεγεννημένον, κατέληλυθέναι τὸν Χριστὸν εἰς αὐτόν, τουτέστιν τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον ἐν εἵδει περιστερᾶς ἐν τῷ Ἰορδάνῃ.

The EBIONITES, who like the Cerinthians regarded Jesus as the son of Mary and Joseph by natural generation (Iren.), agreed with them also in attaching the greatest significance to the Baptism. It was the moment when He became the Christ and the Son of God by the Father's choice: cf. Justin, dial. 49 οἱ λέγοντες ἄνθρωπον γεγονέναι αὐτὸν καὶ κατ' ἐκλογὴν κεχρίσθαι καὶ Χριστὸν γεγονέναι. When Epiphanius (i. 30. 14) adds βούλονται...Χριστὸν ἐν αὐτῷ (sc. τῷ Ἰησοῦ) γεγενῆσθαι τὸν ἐν περιστερᾶς εἵδει καταβεβηκότα, he attributes to the Ebionites a Gnostic view which was probably not known to primitive Ebionism.

The BASILIDIANS shewed their sense of the importance of the Baptism by observing the day as a festival and spending the previous night in a vigil-service: Clem. Al.

strom. i. 21 (146) οἱ δὲ ἀπὸ Βασιλείδου καὶ τοῦ βαπτίσματος αὐτοῦ τὴν ἡμέραν ἐορτάζουσι προδιανυκτερεύοντες ἀναγνώσει¹. Clement adds that they regarded the dove as the 'Minister' or 'Ministering Spirit': fragm. 16 καὶ ἡ περιστέρα δὲ σῶμα ὤφθη, ἣν οἱ μὲν τὸ ἅγιον πνεῦμά φασιν, οἱ δὲ ἀπὸ Βασιλείδου τὸν διάκονον (cf. strom. ii. 8. 449, and see Hort in D. C. B. i. p. 276). The effect of the descent of the Aeon on Jesus was to reveal to him the Gospel which he thenceforth preached: Hippol. vii. 26 κατήλθεν ἀπὸ τῆς ἑβδομάδος τὸ φῶς...ἐπὶ τὸν Ἰησοῦν τὸν υἱὸν τῆς Μαρίας, καὶ ἐφωτίσθη συνεξαφθεὶς τῷ φωτὶ τῷ λάμπαντι εἰς αὐτόν.

The VALENTINIANS were agreed in regarding the Power which descended on Jesus as an Aeon, but differed widely in details. See Iren. i. 7. 2 εἰς δὲ οἱ λέγοντες... εἰς τοῦτον ἐπὶ τοῦ βαπτίσματος κατελθεῖν ἐκείνον τὸν ἀπὸ τοῦ πληρώματος ἐκ πάντων Σωτῆρα ἐν εἵδει περιστερᾶς: iii. 16. 1 sunt qui dicunt Iesum quidem receptaculum Christi fuisse, in quem desuper quasi columbam descendisse Christum. Hippolytus (vi. 35) thus distinguishes the views of the Italic and Anatolic schools: οἱ μὲν ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰταλίας...ψυχικὸν φασὶ τὸ σῶμα τοῦ Ἰησοῦ γεγονέναι, καὶ διὰ τοῦτο ἐπὶ τοῦ βαπτίσματος τὸ πνεῦμα ὡς περιστέρα κατέληλυθε, τουτέστιν ὁ λόγος ὁ τῆς μητρὸς ἄνωθεν τῆς σοφίας...οἱ δ' αὖ ἀπὸ τῆς ἀνατολῆς λέγουσιν... ὅτι πνευματικὸν ἦν τὸ σῶμα τοῦ σωτήρος· πνεῦμα γὰρ ἅγιον ἦλθεν ἐπὶ τὴν Μαρίαν, τουτέστιν ἡ σοφία. What place the latter school assigned to the baptismal descent does not appear. Clement, however, in the excerpt already cited (fragm. 16) says: οἱ δὲ ἀπὸ Οὐαλεντίνου (the Anatolic school) τὸ πνεῦμα τῆς ἐνθυμήσεως τοῦ πατρὸς τὴν κατέλευσιν πεποιημένον ἐπὶ τὴν τοῦ λόγου σάρκα.

The significance which the early Catholic Church attached to the Baptism is well shewn by Irenaeus, iii. 18. 3:

THE ΔΑΙΜΟΝΙΑ OF THE GOSPELS.

The word δαιμόνιον is widely distributed through the N.T., appearing in each of its sections, though most frequent in the Gospels, especially the Synoptists (Mt.⁹, Mc.¹³, Lc.²⁰, Jo.⁶, Acts¹, Paul⁵, Jas.¹, Apoc.³). Δαίμων occurs once (Mt. viii. 31) with no perceptible difference of meaning.

The δαιμόνια are πνεύματα, but πνεῦμα where so used is commonly qualified by ἀκάθαρτον (Mt. x. 1, xii. 43, Mc. i. 23 ff., iii. 11, 30, v. 2, 8, 12, vi. 7, vii. 25, ix. 25, Lc. iv. 36, vi. 18, viii. 29, ix. 42, xi. 24, Acts v. 16, viii. 7, Apoc. xvi. 13, xviii. 2) or πονηρόν (Mt. xii. 4, Lc. vii. 21, viii. 2, xi. 26, Acts xix. 12 ff.). Πνεῦμα δαιμονίου (ἀκάθαρτον) is found in Lc. iv. 33, Apoc. xvi. 14; cf. πνεῦμα πύθων in Acts xvi. 16.

In the Acts and Epistles the word bears the sense which it usually has in the O.T.; the δαιμόνια are the evil forces which lie behind the immoral worships of the heathen world (1 Cor. x. 20, 21, Apoc. ix. 20; cf. Deut. xxxii. 16 f., Ps. xc. (xci.) 6, xcv. (xcvi.) 5, cv. (cvi.) 37, Isa. lxv. 3, 11, Baruch iv. 7), or they are the powers of evil generally (Jas. ii. 19, 1 Tim. iv. 1). The wisdom of the world on its worst side is said to be δαιμονιώδης, of the sort which is akin to the character of the δαιμόνια (Jas. iii. 15).

In the Gospels the δαιμόνια appear as unclean spirits which enter into men (Lc. viii. 30), who are thereupon said

 ἔχειν δαιμόνιον (Mt. xi. 18, Lc. vii. 33, Jo. vii. 20, viii. 48 ff., x. 20), or to be 'demonized' (δαιμονίζεσθαι Mt. iv. 24, viii. 16, 28, 33, ix. 33, xii. 22, xv. 22, Mc. i. 32, v. 15 ff., Lc. viii. 36, Jo. x. 21). In some cases more than one demon takes up his abode in the same human victim (ἐπτά 'Mc.' xvi. 9, Lc. viii. 2; πολλοί ἐσμεν, Mc. v. 9). The effects of their indwelling are madness (Jo. x. 20), epilepsy (Mc. ix. 20 ff.), and other diseases—chiefly, as far as can be seen, such as are mental or connected with the nervous system. The person who is under the influence of a demon is not master of himself; the evil spirit speaks through his lips or makes him dumb at pleasure (Mc. i. 34, iii. 11, ix. 25), drives him whither it wills (Lc. viii. 29) and generally uses him as its tool, sometimes imparting for this end a super-human strength (Mc. v. 3 f.).

Exorcism seems to have been freely used by the Jews of our Lord's time to overcome the power of the demons (Mt. xii. 27, Acts xix. 13). Jesus used no formula or incantation, but relied on the power of His own word; at His bidding or at the bidding of men authorized by Him the demons were constrained to leave their victims, and go elsewhere (Mc. v. 10 ἔξω τῆς χώρας, Lc. viii. 31 εἰς τὴν ἄβυσσον).

It is not clear in what relation these evil spirits stand to the personal or quasi-personal 'Satan.'

In some passages the action of the δαιμόνια is identified with that of Satan; e.g. in Acts x. 38 where our Lord is said to have gone from place to place ἰώμενος πάντας τοὺς καταδυναστευομένους ὑπὸ τοῦ διαβόλου, i.e. τοὺς δαιμονιζομένους; and Mc. iii. 23 f. where His casting out of the demons is treated as synonymous with the casting out of Beelzebul, i.e. Satan, who is ὁ ἄρχων τῶν δαιμονίων. Similarly in Lc. xiii. 11 the woman who had a πνεῦμα ἰσθερείας for eighteen years which prevented her from lifting herself up is said to have been bound by Satan.

The δαιμόνια are thus regarded as Satan's subalterns, doing his work. It would appear that they are to be identified with the 'angels' who are classed with the Devil in Mt. xxv. 41, Apoc. xii. 8 f., and perhaps also with the πνευματικὰ τῆς πονηρίας of Eph. vi. 12, which are at once ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις (belonging to the unseen world) and yet are κοσμοκράτορες τοῦ σκότους τούτου.

Add. Note
C.

However this may be, it seems that the teaching of the New Testament, both in the Gospels and the Epistles, supports the doctrine that there is a spiritual order of beings or forces which is directly antagonistic to Christ and to His Spirit in the Church. In the days of His flesh our Lord, full of the Holy Spirit, cast these unclean spirits out of the bodies of the possessed, even as He Himself in the Spirit had driven away their Ruler. When after the Ascension He came again in the Spirit the same antagonism appeared, but the battle was fought thenceforth in the inner life of man. The Ruler of this world (Jo. xii. 31 f., xvi. 11), the Ruler of the power of the air (Eph. ii. 2), already potentially condemned and cast out by the victory of the Cross, still retains his precarious hold on the world of heathendom, and wages war upon the Body of Christ (Eph. vi. 12 ἔστιν ἡμῖν ἡ πάλη...πρὸς τὰς ἀρχάς), working through his agents, the countless forces of spiritual evil which only the Parousia will finally disperse. Such a view of the mystery of life may be inconsistent with present modes of thought, but that it was held by the generation to whom we owe the New Testament, and that they represent our Lord as having held it, there is no reason to doubt.

THE 'OTHER PARACLETE.'

Ἄλλον παράκλητον δώσει ὑμῖν seems to imply that when the Fourth Gospel was written the term παράκλητος was already applied in Christian circles to Jesus Christ, and this is confirmed by its direct use in reference to our Lord in 1 Jo. ii. 1. It is even possible that the Lord had so described Himself in conversations with the Twelve, using the Aramaic פִּרְקִלִּיטָא (= Neo-Hebrew פִּרְקִלִּיטָא, Abboth iv. 15; cf. C. Taylor ad loc.), and that ἄλλον παράκλητον is a direct reminiscence of His last discourse.

That in 1 Jo. ii. 1 the word is rightly translated Advocate is not questioned, and the same meaning is claimed for it in Jo. xiv. 16, 26, xv. 26, xvi. 7 by Bp Lightfoot (On a fresh revision of the N. T., p. 50) and Bp Westcott (St John, ed. 1908, II. p. 188 ff.). The form is undoubtedly passive, and advocatus is the natural interpretation of a passive verbal formed from παρακαλεῖν. Against this it is urged (e.g. by Jülicher, in Enc. Bibl. 3569) that usage seems to have favoured an active sense; in Job xvi. 2 Aquila and Theodotion substitute παράκλητοι for LXX. παρακλήτορες, and in Philo παράκλητος occurs in the sense of 'counselor' (De mund. orif. 6 οὐδενὶ δὲ παρακλήτω...μόνῳ δὲ ἑαυτῷ χρῆσάμενος ὁ θεός), or 'intercessor' (vit. Mos. iii. 14, where the Logos is so described); see Hatch, Essays, p. 82 f. The Advocate passes naturally into the Intercessor or the Counsellor or the Comforter, as the needs of the case may require.

The question is complicated by the use of παράκλησις in the Acts and Epistles. When in Acts ix. 31 we read of the παράκλησις τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος, we are tempted to connect this word, whether in the sense of 'exhortation' or of 'comfort,' with St John's title for the Holy Spirit. But there is no evidence that παράκλητος was used beyond the Johannine circle, or that it suggested the Christian use of παράκλησις, which would naturally arise from the constant need of a name to express one of the commonest of Christian duties. The παράκλησις of the Holy Spirit is that deepest encouragement or appeal which is addressed to the hearts of men by the voice of God.

On the whole it seems best to translate παράκλητος 'Advocate' in the Gospel as well as in the Epistle. The ἄλλος παράκλητος must be such as His predecessor was and is. But the Advocate who pleads our cause in the heart does not merely defend and protect; He intercedes, He counsels, He instructs, He comforts. Thus the name of 'Comforter,' which has held its place in English versions of St John's Gospel from the time of Wyclif, is not wholly misleading, although it might have been better if the English reader had been from the first accustomed to the more comprehensive 'Paraclete.'

THE RELATION OF THE ASCENSION TO THE PENTECOSTAL EFFUSION OF THE SPIRIT.

That the departure of the Incarnate Son to the Father was a necessary condition of the coming of the Spirit from the Father is taught explicitly in Jo. xvi. 7 εἰ μὴ ἀπέλθω, ὁ παράκλητος οὐ μὴ ἔλθῃ πρὸς ὑμᾶς. And as a matter of fact, as the Evangelist writing after the event remarks, there was 'no Spirit,' no coming or effusion of the Spirit, until Jesus had been glorified (Jo. vii. 39). The sending of the Spirit was the direct and almost immediate consequence of His glorification, i.e. His return to the Father (Lc. xxiv. 49, Acts ii. 33). There was an interval of "not many days," which was necessary in order that the Church might be prepared by a period of waiting and prayer, and that the Coming might coincide with the Pentecost when Jerusalem would be full of pilgrims from all parts. On Christ's part all was ready from the moment of the Ascension.

Add. Note

The two phrases which St John uses for the Ascension explain the relation in which it stands to the Descent of the Spirit.

1. The Ascension was a departure, to be followed by an arrival (ἀπέλθω...ἔλθῃ). It was the withdrawal of a visible Presence, the terminus ad quem of the earthly life and the terminus a quo of a Presence purely spiritual. The two modes of Christ's presence could not be conterminous or coexist; the second could not begin till the first had reached its end. The Ascension completed the days of the Son of Man, the life which He lived in the flesh. The Resurrection had begun the great change; from Easter morning He was already ascending (Jo. xx. 17 ἀναβαίνω); the final rapture on the Mount of Olives ended the ascent (ἀναβέβηκα) and ushered in that life in the Spirit in which He could come to His own again, and abide with them for ever.

2. The Ascension was the glorification of the Son of Man (Jo. xii. 16 ἐδοξάσθη Ἰησοῦς, xvii. 5 νῦν δόξασόν με σύ, πάτερ, πὰρὰ σεαυτῷ): the humanity, perfected by suffering (Heb. ii. 10, v. 9) and victorious over death, entered the Divine Presence to take its place in union with the Person of the Eternal Son at the right hand of the Father. But the glorification of humanity in Christ has for its end the endowment of humanity in the rest of the race. He ascended up that He might fill all things (Eph. iv. 10) As the righteous, victorious Head of the Church He claimed and received for her the promised gift of the Spirit (Acts ii. 33) by which members of the Christ are to be in due course brought to the glory of their Head.

THE RELATION OF THE PENTECOSTAL EFFUSION TO EARLIER COMINGS OF THE SPIRIT.

The Pentecostal coming of the Spirit is represented in the N.T. as a mission parallel to the mission of the Son, and consequent upon it. Cf. Jo. xiv. 24, 26 τοῦ πέμψαντός με πατρός...τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον ὃ πέμψει ὁ πατήρ ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί μου; Gal. iv. 4, ὃ ἐξαπέστειλεν ὁ θεὸς τὸν υἱὸν αὐτοῦ ...ἐξαπέστειλεν ὁ θεὸς τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ. As the Son "came into the world" at the Advent (Jo. xvi. 28), so the Spirit came at the Pentecost; before the Pentecost there was "no Spirit" in this sense.

Yet the O.T. prophets claim that the Spirit was at work in Israel even in the days of the Exodus (Isa. lxiii. 11 ff.), while the broader thought of Alexandrian Judaism held that the Spirit 'filled the world' and was to be found in the lives of all wise and good men. Is this belief consistent with the Christian doctrine of the Pentecostal Coming?

The same difficulty arises in connexion with the Incarnation of the Word. If the Son was not sent into the world until the fulness of the times had been reached, yet He was in the world from the first (Jo. i. 9 ἦν...ἐρχόμενον, 10 ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ ἦν; compare the doctrine of the Divine Wisdom in Prov. viii. 27-31). Similarly the Spirit of God has ever been in the world from the moment when it moved on the face of the waters, calling forth vitality and a cosmic order. As man emerged from the mere animal into a conscious intellectual life, the Spirit wrought upon him; and the history of Israel in particular is one long manifestation of His presence and working in the Chosen People. Yet there was no indwelling of the Spirit in men, no effusion of His life and power upon the race in general, till He received the special mission which sent Him to carry forward the work of the Incarnate Son. The new order involved in that mission is characterized as having its sphere in believers (Jo. xiv. 17 ἐν ὑμῖν ἔσται). The entrance of the Spirit into the Body of the Church, and into the hearts of its members individually, corresponds with the entrance of the Word into the womb of Mary; though not like that an incarnation, it is a permanent inhabitation of humanity (Jo. xiv. 16 ἵνα ἡμεῖς ὑμῶν εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα).

Add. Note

Thus the Pentecostal effusion of the Spirit in no way conflicts with the doctrine of the Spirit's world-long activity in nature and in man, while on the other hand it is seen to inaugurate a new association of the Spirit with humanity far more intimate and enduring than any which had previously existed.

THE GIFT OF PROPHECY.

This note will deal only with prophecy as a χάρισμα, i.e. as one of the gifts bestowed upon the Church by the Spirit of Christ.

1. The gift was not universal (1 Cor. xii. 10 ἄλλω δὲ προφητεία, 29 μὴ πάντες προφήται;), but it was widely diffused in the churches, at least in those founded by St Paul (Acts xx. 23 τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον κατὰ πόλιν διαμαρτύρεται). In the congregation at Corinth it was evidently usual to hear several prophetic utterances at every assembly, and the Apostle even contemplates the possibility of every member of the Church prophesying in turn (1 Cor. xiv. 28 ff.). Probably, however, only a relatively small number of believers were 'established to be prophets,' forming a charismatic order to which a recognized position was given in the Church. Such persons were said ἔχειν προφητείαν (1 Cor. xiii. 2), and known as οἱ προφῆται (Eph. ii. 20, iii. 5, Apoc. xviii. 20, xxii. 6), being thus distinguished from those who occasionally 'prophesied' (Acts xix. 6, 1 Cor. xi. 4 f., xiv. 31).

2. At first there was a disposition in the Gentile churches to undervalue the gift of prophecy, and even to make light of the utterances of the prophets (1 Thess. v. 19 f. τὸ πνεῦμα μὴ σβέννυτε, προφητείας μὴ ἐξουθενεῖτε); probably because the gift of tongues was more novel and attractive. In 1 Corinthians St Paul sets himself to correct this error of judgement, placing the prophetic order next after the Apostolate (xii. 28 δεύτερον προφήτας), and pointing out the value of prophecy as a means of edification and conversion (xiv. 3 ff., 24 ff.). The prophets seem to have been in fact to a great extent the teaching ministry of the primitive Church, and to have acquired before the end of the century an influence which overshadowed that of the bishops and deacons (see the writer's Apocalypse, p. xx f.). Their gift was sometimes exercised in the selection of other ministers (Acts xiii. 1 ff., xx. 28, 1 Tim. i. 18, iv. 14); together with the Apostles they might be regarded as the foundation stones of the Church (Eph. ii. 20), sharing with the highest order the task of initiating and consolidating all Christian work. It is easy to understand the great importance of a body of men

G.

Add. Note G. under the immediate guidance of the Spirit at a time when the local ministry was drawn from new converts who possessed a very imperfect knowledge of their faith, and had undergone little preparation in the way of moral or spiritual training.

3. Nevertheless, while placing a high value on the order of prophets, St Paul was conscious of its limitations. He realized that the imperfection of the instrument might seriously distort the impression which the Holy Spirit had purposed to convey. In his own experience he had found it to be his duty to neglect a command given to him through the Spirit (Acts xxi. 4); contrast his ready obedience when he was convinced that the Spirit itself prohibited progress (Acts xvi. 6 f.). Spirits of prophets, he taught, are subject to prophets (1 Cor. xiv. 32), i.e. the prophets were responsible for their use of their gift. The utterances of the prophets might be subjected to tests, which could be applied by other members of the congregation who possessed gifts of discrimination (1 Thess. v. 21, 1 Cor. xii. 10, xiv. 29). Prophets must prophesy according to the proportion of their faith (Rom. xii. 6), i.e. their power to use the gift aright varied with the measure of their own spiritual attainments. Christian prophecy was no mantic art, but a spiritual power which needed a spiritual man to turn it to good account.

4. The great purpose of Christian prophecy was to bear witness to Jesus Christ (Apoc. xix. 10). The Spirit of prophecy was the Spirit of witness which belonged to the Church as a whole (Jo. xv. 26, Acts i. 8), but was specially manifested in the mission of the prophetic order. As the Church grew in knowledge and faith, it became increasingly able to bear its witness through the regular ministry and in the lives of its members generally. Prophecies therefore, in the sense of specially inspired utterances, gradually ceased in the Church, the place of the prophet being taken partly by the teaching bishop or presbyter, partly by the testimony which every well-instructed believer bears by word or act to the name of the Lord Jesus. There is in the history of the Church an increasing advance towards the ideal state when 'all the Lord's people' shall be 'prophets' in this sense. But when that has been reached, prophecy, as St Paul knew it, will be at an end. For prophecy as a special gift of the Spirit was in part, but when that which is perfect is come, that which is in part shall be done away (1 Cor. xiii. 8ff.). Even the greatest and best of the χαρίσματα implied imperfection, and was therefore temporary; there was a still more excellent way in which the Spirit came to abide with men, the way of faith and hope and, above all, of love.

THE GIFT OF TONGUES.

We begin by placing before us the whole of the N.T. evidence. With the exception of a passing reference to the Tongues in the appendix to St Mark, they are mentioned only in Acts and 1 Corinthians.

The passages are as follows:

'Mc.' xvi. 17 γλώσσαις λαλήσουσιν καιναῖς (om. καιναῖς C*L and some other authorities).

Acts ii. 4 ἤρξαντο λαλεῖν ἑτέραις γλώσσαις καθὼς τὸ πνεῦμα ἐδίδου ἀποφθέγγεσθαι αὐτοῖς.

I Cor. xii. 28 [ἔθετο ὁ θεὸς ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ] γένη γλωσσῶν.

I Cor. xiii. 1 εἰ ἐν ταῖς γλώσσαις τῶν ἀνθρώπων λαλῶ καὶ τῶν ἀγγέλων, ἀγάπην δὲ μὴ ἔχω, γέγονα χαλκὸς ἡχῶν ἢ κύμβαλον ἀλαλάζον.

I Cor. xiv. 2—5 ὁ γὰρ λαλῶν γλώσση οὐκ ἀνθρώποις λαλεῖ ἀλλὰ θεῷ, οὐδεὶς γὰρ ἀκούει, πνεύματι δὲ λαλεῖ μυστήρια ...ὁ λαλῶν γλώσση ἑαυτὸν οἰκοδομεῖ...μείζων δὲ ὁ προφητεύων ἢ ὁ λαλῶν γλώσσαις, ἐκτὸς εἰ μὴ διερμηνεύῃ κτλ.

I Cor. xiv. 18 πάντων ὑμῶν μᾶλλον γλώσσαις λαλῶ· ἀλλὰ ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ θέλω πέντε λόγους τῷ νοῦ μου λαλῆσαι, ἵνα καὶ ἄλλους κατηχήσω, ἢ μυρίους λόγους ἐν γλώσσῃ.

I Cor. xiv. 22 f. αἱ γλώσσαι εἰς σημεῖόν εἰσιν οὐ τοῖς πιστεύουσιν ἀλλὰ τοῖς ἀπίστοις...εἰ οὖν συνέλθῃ ἡ ἐκκλησία ὅλη ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ καὶ πάντες λαλῶσιν γλώσσαις, εἰσέλθωσιν δὲ ἰδιῶται ἢ ἀπίστοι, οὐκ ἐροῦσιν ὅτι μαίνεσθε ;

I Cor. xiv. 26 ff. ὅταν συνέρχησθε ἕκαστος...γλώσσαν ἔχει, ἐρμηνίαν ἔχει...εἴτε γλώσση τις λαλεῖ, κατὰ δύο ἢ τὸ πλεῖστον τρεῖς, καὶ ἀνὰ μέρος, καὶ εἰς διερμηνευέτω· εἰ δὲ μὴ ἢ διερμηνευτὴς, σιγάτω ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ, ἑαυτῷ δὲ λαλείτω καὶ τῷ θεῷ.

I Cor. xiv. 39 τὸ λαλεῖν μὴ κωλύετε γλώσσαις.

The following points may be noted :

(1) The γλώσσαι are attributed to the action of the Holy Spirit (Acts ii. 4, x. 45, xix. 6, I Cor. xii. 8—10); they belonged to τὰ πνευματικά (I Cor. xiv. 1).

(2) They were ἑτεραι, not the native tongues of the speakers (Acts ii. 4), and καιναί, a fresh experience, one of the series of καινά brought in by the Incarnation.

(3) They were of various kinds, γένη γλωσσῶν (1 Cor. xii. 10, 28) just as there are various languages spoken among men (γένη φωνῶν ἐν κόσμῳ, 1 Cor. xiv. 10). Add. Note

(4) At Corinth and in St Paul's experience the sounds uttered were not intelligible to a congregation, unless they were interpreted (1 Cor. xiv. 2 ff.); nor did they convey any meaning to the intelligence of the speaker, although they seem to have served as a means of stimulating spiritual activity and enabling him to hold fellowship with God and thus to gain personal edification (1 Cor. xiv. 2, 4, 14).

(5) On the first occasion when the gift was exercised, it appears that the utterances, which were 'strange' to the Apostles and their company, sounded in the ears of the excited crowd as the words of their mother tongues (Acts ii. 6 ff.). It will be observed, however, that the historian of the Acts does not affirm that the speakers spoke in the tongues of the several nationalities that made up the crowd, but only that the hearers so interpreted their utterances ἤκουσεν εἰς ἕκαστος...ἀκούομεν. It is a subjective effect which is described, and not an objective fact.

(6) Tongues, besides being a means of edification to the speaker, were in heathen lands a warning to non-Christians that the Church possessed an unexplained power which might be Divine (1 Cor. xiv. 22). On the other hand an unwise use of the power might lead to a suspicion that those who possessed it were either drunken or mad (Acts ii. 13, 1 Cor. xiv. 23).

(7) The 'interpretation of tongues' was a distinct gift of the Spirit, not necessarily possessed by the glossolalete (1 Cor. xii. 10); the man who spoke with tongues might pray for the power to interpret his own utterances, but it does not appear that he could acquire it by personal effort. From this it seems to follow that, in St Paul's experience at least, the 'tongues' did not answer to any language which was in actual use.

Add. Note

(8) Notwithstanding its liability to abuse St Paul did not forbid the exercise of this gift, which he recognized as an operation of the Spirit (1 Cor. xiv. 39). But he restricted its public use (ib. 27 f.), placed it last in his list of spiritual powers (1 Cor. xii. 10), and realized its temporary character (1 Cor. xiii. 8).

(9) On the whole it may be gathered that the gift of tongues was a manifestation of the Spirit conditioned by the circumstances of the first age, and experienced chiefly on occasions of strong excitement such as those described in the Acts, or by communities such as the Church at Corinth, which had been recently brought out of heathenism and lived in an environment unfavourable to the normal development of the Christian life. The spiritual element in the primitive γλωσσολαλία lay not in the strange utterances themselves, but in the elevation of heart and mind by which men were enabled to 'magnify God,' to 'speak mysteries,' to 'pray in the Spirit' and 'sing in the Spirit,' even at moments when the understanding was unfruitful, and the tongue refused to utter intelligible sounds.

THE LAYING ON OF HANDS.

For the history of this ceremony in general the reader is referred to an article in Hastings' D. B. (III. 84 f.). The present note must be limited to its N.T. use in connexion with the imparting of the gifts of the Spirit.

There is a remarkable anticipation of this use in Deut. xxxiv. 9, a passage which refers to Num. xxvii. 18, 23 (see Driver ad loc.). By P, Joshua is represented "as a man in whom is (the) spirit" (אִישׁ אֲשֶׁר רִיחַ בּוֹ), on whom Moses is to lay his hands ; D inverts the thought ; “ Joshua was full of the spirit of wisdom, for Moses had laid his hands upon him ” (פִּי סִמְךָ מִיָּדָיו מֹשֶׁה אֶת-יְהוֹשֻׁעַ). The laying on of hands, it seems to be implied, brought an increase of spiritual power to one who already possessed it.

Add. Note
I.

In Acts the ceremony is twice used by Apostles on persons recently baptized, with the result that they ‘received Holy Spirit’ (Acts viii. 17) or that ‘the Holy Spirit came upon them’ (Acts xix. 6). Spiritual gifts followed ; in the latter case the men ἐλάλουν γλώσσαις καὶ ἐπροφήτευον, in the former the sorcerer Simon was so impressed by what he saw that he offered the Apostles money for the magical power which he supposed them to possess.

There is an apparent reference to this post-baptismal ceremony in Heb. vi. 2 βαπτισμῶν διδαχῆς (WH., with Bd, διδαχὴν) ἐπιθέσεώς τε χειρῶν. But the vagueness of the plural βαπτισμῶν suggests a wider meaning of ἐπιθεσις χειρῶν in this place. If βαπτισμῶν διδαχὴ is ‘instruction in the rites of lustration’ (Heb. ix. 10), i.e. those which culminated in John’s baptism and the spiritual baptism ordained by Christ, ἐπιθέσεως χειρῶν διδαχὴ will in like manner cover the various uses of the laying on of hands under the old covenant and in the Church, including no doubt its use after baptism.

The Apostolic age used imposition of hands also in the setting apart of her members to any special ministry. Cf. Acts vi. 6 (the Seven) ; xiii. 3 (Barnabas and Saul) ; 1 Tim. iv. 14, 2 Tim. i. 6 (Timothy) ; 1 Tim. v. 22 (bishops and deacons ordained by Timothy). This ἐπιθεσις χειρῶν also was accompanied by a special χάρισμα (1 Tim. iv. 16 τοῦ ἐν σοὶ χαρίσματος ὃ ἐδόθη σοι διὰ προφητείας μετὰ ἐπιθέσεως τῶν χειρῶν τοῦ πρεσβυτερίου ; 2 Tim. i. 6 τὸ χάρισμα τοῦ θεοῦ ὃ ἐστὶν ἐν σοὶ διὰ τῆς ἐπιθέσεως τῶν χειρῶν μου). The gift is defined as πνεῦμα δυνάμεως καὶ ἀγάπης καὶ σωφρονισμοῦ. (For the interpretation of these Add. Note I. passages see the foregoing pages, especially pp. 244 ff., 322 ff.).

In none of these instances of the laying on of hands is there any trace of a belief in the magical virtue of the act. It is simply the familiar and expressive sign of benediction inherited by the Apostles from the Synagogue and adapted to the service of the Church. As employed by the Spirit-bearing Body of Christ it was attended by the gifts of the Spirit for which prayer had been made in each case. The Church to-day follows the example of the Apostles in the rites of Confirmation and Ordination, expecting that in answer to her prayers the Apostolic sign will be accompanied in each case by such gifts as the needs of our own age and the duties to which men are severally called may seem to demand.

UNCTION.

The N.T. uses the verb χρίειν metaphorically with reference to the Christ in Lc. iv. 18 (Isa. lxi. 1), Acts iv. 27, x. 38, Heb. i. 9 (Ps. xlv. 7); and with reference to Christians in 2 Cor. i. 21. The gift of the Holy Spirit is called χρίσμα in 1 Jo. ii. 20, 27.

Both the verb and the noun were adopted from the LXX. Χρίειν in the LXX. with few exceptions answers to מָשַׁח, which usually represents the religious use of oil or unguents, especially in the consecration of persons to high offices (cf. Enc. Bibl. I. col. 172 f.; Brown-Driver-Briggs, I. p. 602 f.). In Isa. lxi. 1 (quoted in Lc. Lc.) the office in view is that of the prophet; in Ps. xlv. 7 and in the majority of the O.T. references, it is that of king. In P there is frequent reference to the anointing of the high priest and the other priests, for which purpose a special χρίσμα was prepared (Exod. xxix. 7 τὸ ἔλαιον τοῦ χρίσματος, xxx. 25 ἔλαιον χρίσμα ἁγιον, xl. 13 = 15 χρίσμα ἱερατίας). This rite seems to have been limited at first to the high priest, who is therefore designated ὁ ἱερεὺς ὁ χριστός (Lev. iv. 5); but afterwards it was extended to Aaron's sons (see McNeile on Exodus, p. 188).

The χρίσμα in virtue of which Jesus is ὁ χριστός is explained in Acts x. 38 as Holy Spirit and power—words which connect themselves with Lc. iv. 1, 14 and point to the descent of the Spirit at the Baptism.

With reference to believers, the verb and the noun are each used only in a single context. In 2 Cor. i. 21 we read that it is God ὁ βεβαιῶν ἡμᾶς...εἰς Χριστὸν καὶ χρίσας ἡμᾶς, where χρίσας is evidently suggested by Χριστόν, and it is implied that the Apostle and his colleague shared the unction with which Christ was anointed, i.e. the power of the Spirit. In 1 Jo. ii. 20, 27 this is extended to all believers (ὕμεῖς χρίσμα ἔχετε ἀπὸ τοῦ ἁγίου...ὕμεῖς τὸ χρίσμα ὃ ἐλάβετε ἀπ' αὐτοῦ κτλ.). Ἀπὸ τοῦ ἁγίου and ἀπ' αὐτοῦ are ambiguous, but Christ is probably intended, as in Apoc. iii. 7. The train of thought will then be much the same as in Jo. i. 33, as if St John had written: *ὁ κεχρισμένος, αὐτός ἐστιν ὁ χρίων ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ*¹. The χρίσμα came on the whole Church at Pentecost, and upon individual members of Christ at their baptism (v. 27 ἐλάβετε). But it is not merely a historical fact or a fact realized once in life; the Unction abides (ἔχετε, μένει, and continues to inspire as it inspired at the first (διδάσκει, ἐδίδαξεν).

It has been customary to deny that the N.T. in these passages alludes to any post-baptismal ceremony of unction. At Carthage in the early years of the third century a

Add. Note J. post-baptismal unction preceded the laying on of hands; cf. Tertullian de bapt. 7 egressi de lauacro perungimur benedicta unctione de pristina disciplina...dehinc manus imponitur. But it is precarious to infer from this passage that the custom descended from the Apostolic age. The writer to the Hebrews, it may be argued, would in this case have written in vi. 2 βαπτισμῶν διδαχῆς καὶ χρίσεως ἐπιθέσεώς τε χειρῶν. Nevertheless, since anointing was with the Jews (cf. Ruth iii. 3, Ezek. xvi. 9) as well as with the Greeks and Romans a normal accompaniment of the bath, it is not impossible that the λουτρὸν παλινγενεσίας was followed almost from the first by the use of oil or unguent, which came to be regarded as symbolical of the descent of the anointing Spirit on the Christ and His members. If so, a reference to the custom may be latent in 2 Cor. i. 21 and 1 Jo. ii. 20, 27.

The unction of the sick (Mc. vi. 13, Jas. v. 14) lies beyond the scope of this note, but it may be observed that ἀλείφειν and not χρίειν is used in this connexion. Of the use of unction at ordinations there is no trace in the N.T.

K.

RAPTURE AND ECSTASY.

1. Of Rapture, i.e. a physical removal from one place to another under the impulse of the Spirit, there is but one instance in the N.T. After the baptism of the Eunuch, "the Spirit of the Lord seized (ἥρπασεν) Philip, and the Eunuch saw him no more...but Philip was found at Azotus" (Acts viii. 39). There is no reason to doubt that he made his way from the Gaza road to Azotus (Ashdod) on foot or by some other ordinary means of transit. But he did so under an impulse which is ascribed to the Holy Spirit, and possibly in a frame of mind in which he lost count of time and of outward surroundings. It may be imagined that it was not till he reached Azotus that he returned to the normal life of self-consciousness; how he came there he could not tell; all that lay between his sudden departure from the Eunuch and his arrival on the coast was a blank, or filled only by memories of a quickened life in the Spirit. Such an interpretation of the facts is merely conjectural, but it does not seem to be psychologically impossible in the circumstances of Philip's ministry.

Add. Note
K.

2. Ecstasy (ἔκστασις), properly a surprise which staggers and overwhelms (Mc. v. 42, xvi. 8, Lc. v. 26, Acts iii. 10), is used thrice in the Acts for the mental condition in which men under the influence of the Holy Spirit become conscious only of things that belong to the heavenly order (Acts x. 10 f., xi. 5, xxii. 17). The state is described by St Paul from his own experience in 2 Cor. xii. 2 ff. οἶδα ἄνθρωπον ἐν Χριστῷ...εἴτε ἐν σώματι οὐκ οἶδα εἴτε ἐκτὸς τοῦ σώματος...ἄρπαγέντα ἕως τρίτου οὐρανοῦ...ἡρπάγη εἰς τὸν παράδεισον καὶ ἤκουσεν ἄρρητα ῥήματα. Similar experiences are related by St John in the Apocalypse (i. 10, iv. 2, xviii. 3, xxi. 10), with the assurance that on each occasion he was ἐν πνεύματι, i.e. in the sphere of spiritual realities, the Spirit of God working upon the human spirit and lifting it above the earthly and transient into the heart of the heavenly and eternal.

Such 'ecstasies' belong to the rôle of the apocalyptic prophet, and are not to be looked for among the ordinary operations of the Spirit. Something of the kind, however, seems to have been occasionally granted to the primitive believer who was not a 'prophet' (1 Cor. xiv. 26 ἕκαστος... ἀποκάλυψιν ἔχει); the first age thus literally fulfilled the prophecy οἱ νεανίσκοι ὑμῶν ὀράσεις ὄψονται (Acts ii. 17; cf. 1 Cor. xii. 1). Nor need we doubt that at times of great spiritual stress or in individual cases such experiences may occur in any age. But they must always be exceptional; the normal workings of the Spirit of God are not ecstatic, but are conducted through the ordinary processes of human thought and feeling, gradually bringing heaven down to earth rather than by any sudden elevation lifting earth up to heaven.

THE INSPIRATION OF SACRED BOOKS.

The locus classicus on this subject is 2 Tim. iii. 15 f., where, after mention of ἱερὰ γράμματα (evidently those of the O.T. Canon), the writer proceeds, Πᾶσα γραφή θεόπνευστος καὶ ὠφέλιμος, "every scripture inspired of God is also profitable." Θεόπνευστος is ἄπ. λεγ. in N.T. Greek, and does not occur in the LXX.¹, but its meaning is practically certain (see Ellicott ad loc.) and is well given by the Vulg. divinitus inspirata. The best comment upon γραφὴ θεόπνευστος is to be found in 2 Pet. i. 21 ὑπὸ πνεύματος ἁγίου φερόμενοι ἐλάλησαν ἀπὸ θεοῦ ἄνθρωποι. Strictly speaking, the inspiration belonged to the prophets and other writers of Scripture in a secondary sense, and only their words and their writings were ἀπὸ θεοῦ. Speech and writing gave expression to the personal inspiration of the authors; and so far as they expressed it they might be said to be inspired.

This 'inspiration' of the Old Testament is assumed throughout the Apostolic writings, and by our Lord, as His words are reported in the Gospels. The following passages will suffice to establish this point:

Mt. xxii. 63 Δαυεὶδ ἐν πνεύματι καλεῖ κτλ. = Mc. xii. 46

I Pet. i. 11 ἐδήλου τὸ ἐν αὐτοῖς (sc. τοῖς προφήταις) πνεῦμα Χριστοῦ.

Heb. iii. 7 καθὼς λέγει τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον (in Ps. xcvi.); ix. 8 τοῦτο λαλοῦντος τοῦ πνεύματος τοῦ ἁγίου (in Leviticus): x. 15 μαρτυρεῖ ἡμῖν καὶ τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον (in Jer. xxxi. 33).

That the 'former prophets,' i.e. the historical books, and the Hagiographa, are not quoted with a like claim to inspiration, may be accidental; but the Law, the Psalms, and the Prophets were probably felt to be in a special manner inspired by 'the Spirit of Christ.'

Except in the Apocalypse, which is a prophecy, and in 2 Peter, a book of doubtful genuineness, there is no reference in the N.T. to the inspiration of the Apostolic writings; the Church had as yet no ἱερὰ γράμματα. But the traditional belief in the inspiration of the N.T. finds its justification in the promises of Divine assistance made by our Lord to the Apostles and their company, and the special gifts of the Spirit possessed by the Apostolic age. If the first age was specially guided by the Spirit into a knowledge of all essential truth, its writings have rightly been gathered by the Church into a sacred canon. The Apostolic writings are inspired inasmuch as they are the work of inspired men. It is impossible to believe that the first generation of the Christian Church, fresh from the Pentecostal effusion of the Spirit, and richly endowed with spiritual gifts, spoke and wrote of the things of the Spirit with less θεοπνευστία than the lawgivers, historians, prophets and psalmists of Israel, or that their writings are a less precious heritage than the works of men who wrote before the Spirit came.

M.

REGENERATION.

The word is used but twice in the N.T. In Mt. xix. 28, ἐν τῇ παλιγγενεσίᾳ ὅταν καθίσῃ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐπὶ θρόνου δόξης αὐτοῦ (on which see Dalman, Words of Jesus, E. tr., p. 177 ff., and W. C. Allen, comm. ad loc.), the meaning appears to be 'the order which will follow the Parousia, the new heaven and the new earth of the prophets and apocalyptists.' In Tit. iii. 5 f., ἔσωσεν ἡμᾶς διὰ λουτροῦ παλιγγενεσίας καὶ ἀνακαινώσεως πνεύματος ἁγίου, the reference is clearly to the new birth of the Spirit in Baptism.

Παλιγγενεσία was used by Stoic writers for the periodical restorations (ἀποκαταστάσεις) of the world after successive destructions by fire (ἐκπυρώσεις): thus M. Antoninus (xi. 1) speaks of τὴν περιοδικὴν παλιγγενεσίαν τῶν ὅλων; cf. Philo, de incorr. mundi 14 οἱ τε τὰς ἐκπυρώσεις καὶ τὰς παλιγγενεσίας εἰσηγούμενοι τοῦ κόσμου. But the term had a wider connotation; thus Philo elsewhere applies it to the recovery of the world from the Flood (de vit. Moys. ii. 12) and to life after death (de leg. ad Cai. 41; de cherub. 32); Josephus (antt. xi. 3. 9) speaks of the παλιγγενεσία τῆς πατρίδος which followed the return from Babylon; Cicero (ad Attic. vi. 6), of his own παλιγγενεσία. In Tit. l. c. the word is taken by St Paul into the service of the Holy Spirit, to represent the initial step in the great spiritual process by which the old things passed away or rather have been made new (2 Cor. v. 17 τὰ ἀρχαῖα παρῆλθεν, ἰδοὺ γέγονεν καινὰ) for those who in the baptismal bath have died with Christ and risen again; the birth of the new creation which rises out of the water over which the Spirit of Christ is pleased to brood. It is not impossible that the Apostle, who had met with Stoic philosophers at Athens, and probably also at Rome and in early life at Tarsus, intended to suggest a contrast between the Stoic παλιγγενεσία and the Christian: the one by fire, the other by water; the one physical, the other spiritual; the one subject to periodical relapses and renewals, the other occurring once for all and issuing in an endless life.

SANCTIFICATION.

Ἀγιάζειν is used in the N.T. with reference to (1) the recognition on man's part of the holiness of God or of Christ (Mt. vi. 9, Lc. xi. 2, 1 Pet. iii. 15); (2) our Lord's consecration to His incarnate life by the Father's mission (Jo. x. 36) and by the offering of His own will (Jo. xvii. 19); (3) the consecration of material things to the service of God (Mt. xxiii. 17, 19, 2 Tim. ii. 21); (4) the consecration of the Church and each of its members to a life of progressive holiness (Jo. xvii. 17, Acts xx. 32, xxvi. 18, Rom. xv. 16, 1 Cor. i. 2, vi. 11, Eph. v. 26, 1 Th. v. 25, 1 Tim. iv. 5, Heb. ii. 11, ix. 12, x. 10, 14, 29, xiii. 12, Apoc. xxii. 11). Ἀγιασμός is used only in the last sense (1 Pet. i. 2, Rom. vi. 19, 22, 1 Cor. i. 30, 1 Th. iv. 3 f., 2 Th. ii. 13, Heb. xii. 14).

An examination of the last-named group of passages gives the following results. (a) God, the Father of Christ and of Christians, is the ultimate source of the spirit of consecration in man. He sanctifies men by means of the truth, i.e. the revelation of Himself which He has given in His Son, in which as in a congenial atmosphere the consecrated life springs up and thrives (Jo. xvii. 17 ἀγιάσων αὐτοὺς ἐν τῇ ἀληθείᾳ· ὁ λόγος ὁ σὸς ἀλήθειά ἐστιν. (b) The Father sanctifies through the mediation of the Son (1 Cor. i. 2 ἡγιασμένοις ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, vi. 11 ἡγιασθητε ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ). (c) The Incarnate and glorified Son is thus mediately our Sanctifier (Eph. v. 26 ὁ χριστὸς...ἐαυτὸν παρέδωκεν ὑπὲρ αὐτῆς (sc. τῆς ἐκκλησίας) ἵνα αὐτὴν ἀγιάσῃ, Heb. ii. 11 ὁ τε ἀγιάζων καὶ οἱ ἀγιαζόμενοι ἐξ ἑνὸς πάντες). (d) The sanctifying work of Christ is based on His Sacrifice (Heb. x. 29 τὸ αἷμα...ἐν ᾧ ἡγιασθη; xiii. 12 ἵνα ἀγιάσῃ διὰ τοῦ ἰδίου αἵματος τὸν λαόν), and it is realized in those who are united to Him by faith and baptism (Acts xxvi. 18 ἐν τοῖς ἡγιασμένοις πίστει τῇ εἰς ἐμέ, cf. 1 Cor. vi. 11 ἡγιασθητε...ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰ. Χ.). Thus our Lord becomes to us Sanctification (1 Cor. i. 30 ὃς ἐγενήθη...ἀγιασμός) (e) But when this sanctification, which is Christ in us, is translated into the experience of the Christian life, it is seen to belong to the sphere of the Spirit's activities (Rom. xv. 16 ἡγιασμένη ἐν πνεύματι ἀγίῳ; 1 Cor. vi. 11 ἡγιασθητε...ἐν τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ θεοῦ ἡμῶν; 2 Th. ii. 25, 1 Pet. i. 2 ἐν ἀγιασμῷ πνεύματος). Lastly (f), since the Spirit works through the Word and Sacraments, these are regarded as the means of our sanctification (Eph. v. 26 ἵνα αὐτὴν ἀγιάσῃ, καθάρισας τῷ λουτρῷ τοῦ ὕδατος ἐν ῥήματι). Hence the baptized are described as ἡγιασμένοι or ἅγιοι, or more strictly as ἀγιαζόμενοι, consecrated persons who have at least entered on a life of holiness (1 Cor. i. 2, Heb. ii. 11); and in one place this consecration is extended to the near relatives of the baptized (1 Cor. vii. 14).

Thus in the words of the Anglican Catechism it is "the Holy Ghost who sanctifieth me and all the elect people of God." But the N.T. invites us to trace the work of our sanctification to its sources in God. Behind the work of the Spirit in our lives, there are the sacrificial death and the ascended life of Jesus Christ, who is our Sanctification in that He sends the Spirit and the Spirit is His own presence in the Church; and beyond this again we see the ultimate Source of all holiness, the love of the Father which gave the Son, and through the Son has given the Spirit of grace.

FLESH AND SPIRIT.

The contrast of flesh and spirit is found already in the O.T. (Isa. xxxi. 3 וְלֹא יִשָּׁר וְלֹא יִשָּׁר, LXX. σάρκας καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν βοήθεια, A.Σ.Θ. σάρκες καὶ οὐ πνεῦμα). In the N.T. it first appears in Mc. xv. 38, Mt. xxvi. 21 (τὸ μὲν πνεῦμα πρόθυμον, ἡ δὲ σὰρξ ἀσθενής); see also Jo. iii. 51, vi. 63, 1 Pet. iii. 18, iv. 6, Heb. ix. 31 f., xii. 9. But it is St Paul who uses this antithesis most freely, and carries it into new fields of thought. It will be well to classify his uses of it. He employs it:

1. In reference to the incarnate life of our Lord.

Rom. i. 3 τοῦ γενομένου ἐκ σπέρματος Δαυεὶδ κατὰ σάρκα, τοῦ ὀρισθέντος υἱοῦ θεοῦ ἐν δυνάμει κατὰ πνεῦμα ἀγιοσύνης ἐξ ἀναστάσεως νεκρῶν. 1 Tim. iii. 16 ἐφανερώθη ἐν σαρκί, ἐδικαιώθη ἐν πνεύματι.

2. In reference to human nature in general.

Rom. ii. 28 f. ἡ ἐν τῷ φανερῷ ἐν σαρκὶ περιτομή... περιτομή καρδίας ἐν πνεύματι οὐ γράμματι. (Here there is a double contrast, πνεῦμα being set over against σὰρξ on the one hand and γράμμα on the other; for the latter see 2 Cor. iii. 6.) 2 Cor. vii. 1 καθαρίσωμεν ἑαυτοὺς ἀπὸ παντὸς μολυσμοῦ σαρκὸς καὶ πνεύματος. Gal. iii. 3 ἐναρξάμενοι πνεύματι νῦν σαρκὶ ἐπιτελείσθε; (i.e. 'Is your life in Christ to be an anticlimax, and your last state worse than Add. Note the first?'). Gal. iv. 24 ὁ κατὰ σάρκα γεννηθεὶς ἐδίδωκε τὸν

 O. κατὰ πνεῦμα.

3. In reference to the Christian life viewed as a conflict between opposite principles of action.

(a) Gal. v. 16—24, vi. 8. The flesh and the Spirit here appear as irreconcilable enemies engaged in a warfare which continues to the end of life. Subjection to the flesh can be avoided only by following through life the leading of the Spirit. The flesh proceeds by way of lust (ἐπιθυμία) to acts of sensuality and every kind of open (φανερὰ) sin; the Spirit yields the fruit of every holy disposition. The end to which each of these forces leads is as opposite as their whole procedure; from the flesh comes corruption, from the Spirit life. This apparent dualism is tempered however by the repeated reminder (v. 18, 25, vi. 7 f.) that it rests with each individual to decide whether the one or the other shall be his master.

(b) Rom. viii. 4—13. Here the general conception is the same, but we are permitted to see further into the process by which the hostile principles work. Each acts upon the human mind, affections, and will, and creates a habit of thought and feeling, a fixed attitude of the inner man (φρόνημα) which governs his life. If the man walks after the flesh, his attitude is one of hostility towards God, and he lives in a state of rebellion against His ruling, which ends in spiritual death; if he walks after the Spirit, he is at peace with God, and the end is life. Here nothing is said of the ἔργα, the outward activities of the flesh, which were so 'manifest' in the heathen world; it is the bent and normal position of the inner life on which attention is concentrated. The distinction between the φρόνημα τῆς σαρκός and the φρόνημα τοῦ πνεύματος is even more vital than that which is drawn in Galatians between the ἔργα τῆς σαρκός and the καρπὸς τοῦ πνεύματος.

In these two contexts (Gal. v.—vi., Rom. viii.) it is evident that the flesh is not simply human nature, or the external, physical side of human nature. The word carries in St Paul's use of it here an ethical sense; the flesh is the lower self as it exists under present conditions, a source of weakness at all times and of temptation often, but never of strength or goodness; see Rom. vii. 18 οὐκ οἰκεῖ ἐν ἐμοί, τοῦτ' ἔστιν ἐν τῇ σαρκί μου, ἀγαθόν, viii. 3 σαρκὸς ἁμαρτίας. But what is the spirit in antithesis to the flesh thus understood? Apparently not the Holy Spirit regarded as a Divine Person, nor simply the activity of the Spirit in men, but the higher side of human nature when by the power of the Divine Spirit it is set free from the domination of the flesh. See Rom. viii. 9 ὑμεῖς δὲ οὐκ ἐστὲ ἐν σαρκὶ ἀλλ' ἐν πνεύματι, εἴπερ πνεῦμα θεοῦ οἰκεῖ ἐν ὑμῖν. The spirit then as well as the flesh in St Paul's antinomy are both human, but the human spirit lies dormant and powerless till it has been awakened and enabled by the Spirit of God.

‘SPIRIT’ AND ‘THE SPIRIT.’

The New Testament uses the anarthrous πνεῦμα in the phrases πνεῦμα Κυρίου, πνεῦμα θεοῦ, and πνεῦμα ἅγιον, as well as where the noun stands without a defining genitive or adjective.

(1) Πνεῦμα Κυρίου occurs only in Lc. iv. 18 (a quotation from the O.T.), and Acts viii. 39; in Acts v. 9, 2 Cor. iii. 17 we find τὸ πνεῦμα Κυρίου.

Add. Note P. I Cor. vii. 40¹, xii. 3, 2 Cor. iii. 3, Phil. iii.). Τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ θεοῦ stands in nearly an equal number of passages.

(3) Πνεῦμα ἅγιον is far more frequent in the N.T. than either τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον or τὸ ἅγιον πνεῦμα, the proportion being 54 : 34. By tabulating all the instances of πνεῦμα ἅγιον we get the following results. The anarthrous form is used (a) after prepositions (ἐκ, Mt. i. 18, 20; διὰ, Acts i. 2, iv. 25, 2 Tim. i. 14; ὑπὸ, 2 Pet. i. 21; ἐν, Mt. iii. 11, Lc. iii. 16, Jo. i. 33, Acts i. 5, xi. 16, Rom. ix. 1, xiv. 17, xvi. 16, 1 Cor. xii. 3, 2 Cor. vi. 6, 1 Th. i. 5, Jude 20); (b) in the instrumental dative, without preposition (Mc. i. 8, Acts x. 38); (c) in the genitive, under government (Lc. i. 15, 41, 67, Acts ii. 4, iv. 8, vi. 5, vii. 55, ix. 17, xi. 24, xiii. 9, 52, Rom. xv. 13, 1 Th. i. 6, Tit. iii. 5, Heb. ii. 4, vi. 4); (d) in the accusative after διδόναι or λαμβάνειν (Lc. xi. 13, Jo. xv. 22, Acts viii. 15, 17, 19, xix. 2); (e) in the nominative (Lc. i. 35 πνεῦμα ἅγιον ἐπελεύσεται, ii. 25 πνεῦμα ἡν ἅγιον ἐπ' αὐτόν, Acts xix. 2 οὐδ' εἰ πνεῦμα ἁγιόν ἐστιν ἡκούσαμεν).

In (a) the anarthrous πνεῦμα ἅγιον may usually be explained by "the strong tendency to drop the article after a preposition²," and the case of (b) is not very different. But in (d) and (e), possibly also in (c), Middleton's canon seems to hold good; while τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον or τὸ ἅγιον πνεῦμα is the Holy Spirit considered as a Divine Person, πνεῦμα ἅγιον is a gift or manifestation of the Spirit in its relation to the life of man. Bp Ellicott indeed (on Gal. v. 5) proposes to treat πνεῦμα ἅγιον as a proper name, like the anarthrous Κύριος or θεός. But observation shews that the anarthrous form usually occurs just where a proper name would be inappropriate, i.e. in places where the Spirit is regarded in its operations rather than in its essential life, e.g. in phrases such as πνεύματος ἀγίου πλησθῆναι, πνεῦμα ἅγιον διδόναι or λαμβάνειν; whereas when any personal action or relation is ascribed to the Spirit the article at once reappears, e.g. when the Spirit is said to speak (Mc. xiii. 11, Acts i. 16, x. 10, xiii. 2) or be spoken against (Mc. iii. 29), resisted (Acts vii. 51) or grieved, or when it is coordinated with the Father and the Son (Mt. xxviii. 19, 2 Cor. viii. 13), or described as fulfilling a personal office (Jo. xiv. 26, xv. 26), or performing personal work (Acts xiii. 4, xvi. 6, xv. 28, xx. 23). If there are cases where τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον is used of a gift of the Spirit (e.g. in Acts x. 44 f., xi. 15), the article will be found to be due to the requirements of the construction, or to refer to the preceding context, or (as Blass suggests, Gr. of the N.T., E. tr., p. 149) "to the well-known fact of the [Pentecostal] outpouring."

Add. Note
P.

To convey these finer shades of meaning to the English reader in a version of the N.T. is impossible without the use of paraphrase. In this book πνεῦμα ἅγιον has been in almost every case translated "Holy Spirit" in order to draw the attention of the reader to the absence of the article in the Greek; what is the exact meaning of the anarthrous title must be gathered from the context in which it occurs.

4. Of πνεῦμα used without adjective or article there are 46 instances in the N.T., of which 29 occur in the Epistles of St Paul. Much that has been said about πνεῦμα ἅγιον applies also to πνεῦμα. Thus, to deal first with the Gospels only, whereas τὸ πνεῦμα in Mt. iv. 1, xii. 31, Mc. i. 22, Lc. ii. 27, iv. 1, 14, Jo. i. 32 f., iii. 6, 8, 34, vii. 39^a is the Spirit considered as a Divine Agent, πνεῦμα in Jo. iii. 5 is the inward and spiritual grace of Baptism, a particular operation of the Spirit, and in Jo. vii. 39^b the particular effusion of the Spirit which took place on the day of Pentecost. In the Pauline Epistles it is often a point of great difficulty to determine whether the action of

Add. Note P. the Spirit of God upon the human spirit or the human spirit under the power of the Spirit of God is intended when πνεῦμα is anarthrous. This problem is repeatedly presented to the reader of St Paul in the use of the prepositional phrases ἐν πνεύματι (or πνεύματι simply), κατὰ πνεῦμα, and where πνεῦμα is followed by a defining noun in the genitive (c.g. πνεῦμα νίθεσίας, πρᾶντητος, σοφίας, ἀποκαλύψεως, σωφροσύνης, and the like). In all such cases the Divine Spirit is at least in the background of the thought, for the spiritual conditions described are not attainable apart from Divine help; and yet it is the condition which is in view rather than the Spirit by whom it is realized. On the whole it is perhaps safe in almost all cases to give the anarthrous πνεῦμα, at least in the Pauline writings, a double reference, placing in the foreground of the thought the human spirit awakened, guided, and inhabited by the Spirit of Christ, but never losing sight of the Power by which the spiritual element in man is what it is and may become increasingly dominant until mortality is swallowed up of life.

This angel of

The Ascension is a composite document of which the Jewish source belongs according to Charles to the first century A.D. But he places the editor as late as the third century, and allows that the other two sources (iii. 13⁶—iv. 18, vi.—xi. 40) were Christian. Thus the book can be used as a guide to contemporary Jewish thought only in part and with great reserve.

Codex Bezae wants viii. 29 Φιλίππου to x. 14, and fails us from Acts xxii. 29 to the end of the book.

Ueni Creator Spiritus,
imple superna gratia
quae tu creasti pectora.

qui Paraclitus diceris, donum Dei altissimi, fons uiuus, ignis, caritas,
et spiritalis unctio.

dextrae Dei tu digitus,
tu rite promissum Patris

infunde amorem cordibus infirmi nostri corporis uirtute firmans perpetim.

pacemque dones protinus;
ductore sic te praeuio uitemus omne noxium.

per te sciamus da Patrem noscamus atque Filium, te utriusque Spiritum credamus omni tempore.

sit laus Patri cum Filio, sancto simul Paraclito;
nobisque mittat Filius charisma sancti Spiritus.

INDICES

- I. INDEX OF REFERENCES TO THE NEW TESTAMENT.
- II. INDEX OF GREEK WORDS.
- III. INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

In the first of these indices only the more important references are included, chiefly those to passages discussed in this book.

The third index is limited to matters incidentally mentioned. The reader will find that the titles of the chapters, the headlines of the right-hand pages, and the marginal references are a sufficient guide to the chief subjects of the book.

THE APOCALYPSE OF ST JOHN.
THE GREEK TEXT
WITH INTRODUCTION, NOTES, AND INDICES.

Church Times.—"We may at once say that no student of the Apocalypse will in the future be able to do without it. Dr Swete's treatment is exhaustive and impartial, his personal modesty with regard to expressions of opinion is great, while his knowledge is wide and varied, and his method is characterised by intense reverence . . . The commentary is a model of painstaking care and thought, and particularly strong on its linguistic side."

Guardian.—"We find it all that the high reputation of the writer had led us to expect. . . . A commentary on the Book of Revelation which is at once of the first rank and yet not over the head of any one who is fairly acquainted with the Greek of the New Testament. Even those who know no Greek at all may learn a great deal from the two hundred pages of Preface and Introduction."

Church Quarterly Review.—"Dr Swete's work is likely to remain for many years as the best English commentary, and no one, of whatever nationality, will be able to neglect it."

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ST MARK.
THE GREEK TEXT
WITH INTRODUCTION, NOTES, AND INDICES.

Second Edition. 8vo. 15s.

Critical Review.—"Undoubtedly the best English commentary we possess on Mark. For fulness of information, mastery of the Greek of the LXX and the New Testament, expert knowledge of textual criticism, exact grammatical exegesis and general sobriety of judgment, Dr Swete's work has few to rival it. It is the fruit of long-continued and most painstaking study, and one feels that he can always turn to it with confidence."

Guardian.—"It is satisfactory that another issue of so excellent a work should be wanted within four years of its first appearance, and that those who do not already possess it can now get it in an improved form."

Expository Times.—"It is the best commentary on St Mark in existence, in any tongue. It is also a pattern to other commentators, so faultless is the scholarship, so rich the spiritual insight, so catholic the doctrine."

THE AKHMÎM FRAGMENT OF THE APOCRYPHAL GOSPEL OF ST PETER.

8vo. 5s. net.

Critical Review.—"The text of the Petrine fragment is accompanied by admirable notes which give light on many passages. A Translation is also furnished, and an Introduction of forty-seven pages deals in an interesting and instructive way with a variety of matters connected with the find.... The book is most scholarly, most useful, and worthy of the scholarship of Cambridge."

THE APPEARANCES OF OUR LORD
A STUDY IN THE EARLIEST CHRISTIAN TRADITION.

Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.

Guardian.—"We rejoice that a book of such importance as this, upon a subject of the deepest interest to every Christian, should have come at the present moment from such competent hands. There has been so much controversy during the last few years respecting the Resurrection of our Lord that those who have been perplexed by what they have heard or read, and especially those who are bound to try to teach others, will be glad to possess a volume of very moderate compass in which they can find just the guidance they need."

ESSAYS ON SOME THEOLOGICAL QUESTIONS OF THE DAY.

BY MEMBERS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE.

8vo. 12s. net.

Guardian.—"The volume is one which must engage the attention of all who are interested in theological speculation in English-speaking countries, for the men who have contributed chapters to it are specially qualified to judge of the direction in which religious thought is moving."

ESSAYS ON SOME BIBLICAL QUESTIONS OF THE DAY.

BY MEMBERS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE.

8vo. 12s. net.

Nation.—"The volume may be taken as a fair index of Cambridge study to-day—devout and candid, cautious, quiet, but progressive."
